A Tour Abroad

Foreign space writers who get their information from bureaus heads have been telling Americans that conditions in England are steadily improving. Space writers for big papers seldom if ever come in contact with the masses—particularly the laboring masses—the class that reflects the heart and soul of a nation. This optimism is not shared by the man who earns with his hands. The English laboring classes are dissatisfied and the upper classes are uneasy. This is apparent to any man who takes the trouble to mingle with both classes. A strong current of unrest is running through the social and economic fabric of the nation. As one man sees the situation, England is laboring in her industrial distress like a waterlogged craft in a heavy sea.

Business Barometer Falling Rapidly

During the first quarter of the present year England's national revenue declined more than $100,000,000, as compared with the same period last year, and her foreign trade dropped $700,000,000 in six months, while 25.91 per cent per 1,000 of her population is out of employment. Add to these figures $225,000,000 paid to the unemployed in the form of government doles and you have a pretty fair idea of the heavy burden the nation is carrying.

In France, however, the situation has driven the franc down to 37 for the dollar. Unemployment runs as low as 30 per cent per 1,000 of population, and many idle English pensioners have moved to France where the cost of living is low. Our exports to England, Germany and Italy for the year ending June 30th, more than half of which were taken by Great Britain, increased $324,000,000, while our imports from these countries, more than half of which came from Great Britain, decreased $104,000,000.

Before war the trade balance with England was against us. Since the war our trade balance against England has been steadily increasing.

The reversal of trade balances is directly traceable to England's industrial depression and her increasing dependence upon America and other nations for coal to operate her essential industries. The shares of many textile corporations in Manchester are selling considerably below par and many other industries report heavy losses for the current year. If we continue to pile up an enormous trade balance in our favor England's indebtedness to us, which is quite big enough already, is bound to reach the breaking point.

The Englishman is Sure

For more than four centuries England has sat at the head of the world's table. Man-made nations think the thoughts of men and the resentment toward America that England can not conceal is merely another case of the invisible gulf that widens between borrower and lender and the envy that one man feels toward the other man who has outdistanced him in life's race. This feeling is accentuated by the big brother attitude that England has always had toward America, and when it dawned upon her that she had yielded first place at the head of the table to the little brother on the other side of the Atlantic the shock was too much even for prudential English poise.

"Bad Tourist Manners"

It is seldom that a nation gives its reason for its attitude or conduct in its public policies. So with an individual in politics. This moral lapse seeks but does not find justification in what we are pleased to call diplomacy. The Englishman, although courteous, can not conceal his antipathy toward visiting Americans. His excuse is "bad tourist manners," and in a certain sense this excuse is not without merit. America is rich and every American who visits England is looked upon as a wealthy man. Wealthy men do not find favor with less wealthy men even in their native countries. Most Americans traveling abroad are brusque and inconsiderate. Some affect an air of superiority that is distasteful while others make a vulgar display of the cheap money they have purchased with high prices in dollars.

His conduct is offensive to long-standing customs and traditions. The Englishman's income is small and his taxes are excessive. Out of every dollar of income he pays one-fourth

Galion Team Meets Locals Here Tonight

First Basket Ball Game of Season to be Played This Evening when Ford outfit bucks Galion National Guards.

It is expected that a real fast game of basketball will be staged tonight in Hamilton Hall when the Russell and Reynolds Ford team meets the Galion National Guards. The tilt will begin at 8:00 o'clock.

The Guards are said to be a fast bunch and they will no doubt give the local boys a run for high score. On the other hand the Ford team has won out of playdays that have won recognition on the school teams in the past year or two.

Fans who are interested in basketball will no doubt find the game to-night one of the most interesting of the season and should plan to come early.

Tiro comes to Plymouth with a good record. Their team is seasoned and fast. But Plymouth is in a position to give them a very good game.

The Tiro "bunch" was at one time under the tutelage of Mr.erry. His aspirations are that we deliver a decisive win over these former pupils.

The P. H. S. girls will also be on the job Friday against the Tiro Girls. Guided by Miss Ice the girls have developed wonderfully, and we can see many prospective wins in store for them.

COME! WATCH! You are assured of two good games.

EDITORIAL

Whatever action the county Commissioners and the Village of officials are to take toward the improvement of "True" street should be carried out within the next week on account of the heavy traffic that is to come over this road during the month of December.

We are almost convinced that should any road official, state or county, travel over these mud holes, that would at once recommend an emergency "arrow" to make this impassable street passable. The mud holes have lagged for weeks, even months and at present, it seems that people will have to disband their conveyance, whether it be automobile or buggy and WALK into town.

Perhaps if the citizens should make a drive and raise funds for the purchase of crushed stone and other materials, and pay half of the labor, the officials in whose hands this improvement lies would make some effort to see the project through.

And yet there is some talk down at Columbus of increasing the gas tax to double the present tax. Oh, that some of these highway officials and lawmakers had to travel over True street just one time.

in taxes, nearly half or which goes to the United States. In the meantime the nation is passing through a grueling industrial crisis that comes as a climax to one of the severest industrial depressions recorded in her annals.

If Our Positions Were Reversed England may be resentful toward America for the same lapses in good manners for which she has long been notorious. For centuries England have been known the world over for their abominable arrogance. But human nature is the same everywhere and if our positions were reversed we would perhaps feel the same resentment toward England that she feels towards us. England always wins the last battle, and her tact and good common sense have always managed to keep her away from revolutions. One Sunday afternoon I witnessed a communist gathering of several thousand rough looking men in Trafalgar Square. The speeches were firebrands. Imprisonment would have been the penalty for the same words spoken publicly in America. Mounted police looked on with an air of indifference. The crowd jeered some of the speakers, laughed at others and broke up in a god humor. That is England's method of handling the public, and she will probably survive the crisis through which she is passing. Interference on the part of the police would have meant bloodshed and bloodshed would have cemented the disaffected into an organized army of potential brigands and murderers. America has valuable lessons to learn from the Englishman's methods of mob control and law enforcement.

Solving Her Internal Problems

It has always been England's policy to handle her internal and external problems with gloved hands, but when it becomes necessary for her to strike she strikes with the energy and swiftness of the lion's paw. The gloved hand in the present crisis is the use of the administrative machinery to raise the standard of living of the under classes. The smaller farms hold out hope of relief. England is no larger than Florida, but in her $5,000 square miles there are packed and crowded nearly fifty million disaffected inhabitants. The 1920 census credits Florida with slightly less than two million. England has become over industrialized. She is top-heavy with textile and other manufacturing plants. As the national urban population increased there was a corresponding decrease in the rural population. Consumption jumped far ahead of production and England was forced to turn to other nations for the bulk of her food supply. Large landholders were yeilding in the demands of labor for a better wage and this attitude accelerated the labor movement from country to city. As the urban population increased disease became more prevalent. The same situation which arose in Ireland many years ago was overcome temporarily by cutting the large farms into small tracts, selling these subdivisions to ambitious home-owners on easy payments and starting a back-to-the-farm movement. The institution of this plan was followed by an era of prosperity, both rural and urban, that only lifted the people out of the valley of despair but quelled rioting and disorder and closed the most of Ireland's prisons. England has adopted this same policy to solve her present internal problems. She is taking over large farms and selling these farms to practical farmers on the installment plan. There are 18,000 of the small farms in operation and 10,000 applicants are on the waiting list. But the government's interest does not terminate until the purchaser is able to take care of himself. The same land-settlement policy is extended to the colonies where the terms of purchase and payment are even more liberal. In the colonies the government, if requested to do so, takes charge of shipments, builds bacon and canning factories and offers every facility to the farmer for the orderly marketing of his produce. When a malignant disease strikes a vital organ powerful medicines are used to scatter it over the body. England has in its congested population a malignant disease that is gnawing at its vitals with the energy of the cancer.

More than a month was devoted to the casting of "Breed of the Sea." F. O. B.'s visualization of Peter B. Kyne's magazine story "Blue Bloods and Pirates" which comes from the principals trotted for the inspection of Ralph Ince, the director, more than 500 types to portray pirates, sailors, South Sea islanders, etc.

As to the featured players with Ince himself playing the lead, a dual role, the cast as assembled for the picture can well be called "the perfect personnel." It includes the fascinating Margaret Livingston who has a score of successes to her credit in the most exacting role of career as an Island girl; Dorothy Dunbar, the beautiful, discovered by Edwin C. King, in charge of production and hailed in Hollywood as THE DISCOVERY of 1926; Pat Harmon and Alphonse Ethier character actors in demand by every picture company on the coast and Shannon Day the former Folies beauty who is best remembered for her stellar work in "The Vanishing American."

There's a half dozen minor roles but played by the pick of talent in Hollywood.

"The Midnight Flyer"

Sensational Drama

With Cullen Landis

Building up one of the most dramatic and spectacular romances ever filmed, with a freight locomotive racing on a railroad track to overtake a "Special" running wild and with a young engineer's courageous jump from "one roaring monster to another," "The Midnight Flyer," a sensational melodrama of railroad life in the feed-ridden mountains of West Virginia, comes to the Castamba Friday, 7:00 and 8:30. The new F. B. O. Gold Bond Special is an adaptation by J. Grubb Alexander of two stories from the pen of Arthur Guy Empey, and it provides both action and drama of an unusual sort. The characterizations alone would make it stand out in a class by itself. An all star cast in which Cullen Landis, Dorothy Devore, Buddy Post, Charles Mills, Frangler Darro, Claire McDowell, Barbara Tenant, Elm Billings and Alphonse Ethier are the leading lights interprets the play. Tom Forman, who directed "The Midnight Flyer" was fortunate in having the best of material and a corking cast with which to work, and he has made the most of both.

George McManus Presents "Bringing Up Father" at Temple, Thursday, Dec. 16

Followers of the amusing and irresistibly funny antics, escapades of that well-known trinity of beloved cartoon characters, Jiggs Maggle and Dinty will be given an opportunity of seeing their beloved friends of the comic supplement in the flesh at Willard, O., Temple Theatre, Thursday December 16th. The last stage version of George McManus, world renowned creation is entitled "BRINGING UP FATHER IN FLORIDA" and from all accounts is the best of the series thus far. Meaning that those who date on real favorites will not be disappointed. The entire production is said to be above the average, ranking in many respects with any of the more pretentious and elaborate musical comedies presented here about in recent seasons. The plot holds interest in love, and has rip-roaring action, but plausible and natural, nevertheless adding to the safety of the performance. Besides the production can boast of a capable supporting cast which includes a number of really pretty young men, all exquisitely gowned and costumed. In point of melodies and other exhilarating musical trimmings, the

Just how far a gentleman—who prefers blondes will go was demonstrated last night at the Rialto Theatre during the initial unfolding of Douglas MacLean's latest farce-comedy "Hold That Lion." The smiling comedian follows his blonde charmer around the world before he finally overtakes her in East Africa.

Out on the African veldt, MacLean finds the road to romance not only rocky but blocked by unsavory lions who take violent exception to his comic presence. His methods of dealing and capturing the animals may be contrary to all rules of big game hunting, but it is productive of an abundance of rip-roaring action and hilarious fun.

The above, of course, is merely a skeleton outline of this mad and merry yarn. It doesn't begin to touch upon the broad comedy gags the laughable complications and the breathless thrills woven into the warp and woof of the story. One has to see MacLean dashing about blithely minus his pursuers, or making love in a pair of stolen Scotch kilts, or playing hide-and-seek with the tricky lions to appreciate just how funny this comedy really is.

MOST COLORFUL FIGURE ON STAGE
SIGNED TO STAR FOR PARAMOUNT

Gilda Gray, the American theatre's most picturesque figure, who some months ago signed a contract to star in Paramount features, has just finished her first film. It was adapted from "Aloma of the South Seas," a play which enjoyed great popularity on Broadway. The picture comes to the Temple Theatre at Willard on Monday and Tuesday, December 6-7.

At the time the contract was negotiated, Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President in Charge of Production for Paramount, released the following statement:

"In Gilda Gray, we feel we have signed one of the greatest box office attractions the stage has developed in the past decade. Her popularity is phenomenal. In a single week at reected.

POWDER OKEH AFTER THIRTY YEARS

There is a touch of romance in industry in the fact that on the Brandywine where Washington and his army struggled at Chad's Ford 149 years ago, rigorous tests are always being made to provide an absolutely uniform quality for du Pont's smokeless powders. Once upon a time a Colonel in addressing his soldiers said, "put your trust in God, my boys, and keep your powder dry." There is a well-authenticated anecdote that Oliver Cromwell received some such advice in talking to his soldiers. But smokeless powder is no longer carried around in saddlebags or horns and those who use it do not have to concern themselves very much about keeping it dry. The problem in this "dry" era is to make powder that does not deteriorate with age. A statement put out by the du Pont Company concerning its Brandywine laboratory shows that powder manufactured thirty years ago is in a good condition for use as it was when it was made. In the Brandywine laboratory every variety of smokeless powder before being put on the market is put through tests of time and temperature to prove its qualities and velocity, pressure, and pattern.

PLUMBING IN NORWALK IS IN POOR SHAPE

We are impartial as to what methods may be used in Plymouth to supply pure water, but here's what other towns are facing and unless Plymouth takes great precaution some of the evils will impair water and citizens may make their appearance here in later years.

The Norwalk Reflector Herald gives the following opinion of a plumber in that city concerning the use of chlorine:

"That chlorine used for the past three or four years in the city water has practically ruined the plumbing systems of all Norwalk, is the startling statement made by a Norwalk plumber today."

"Not a week passes" said he, "but that I am called to plug a leaky hot water boiler, or find why water has lost all its pressure on the second floor, or some such thing connected with water. And the reason is that the chlorine has a very deleterious action on all pipes but galvanized or brass and the result is that the average household in Norwalk has hardly any water pressure. The chemical eats in a corrosive way and dissegregates the pipes so that the only remedy is to take them out and put in new. One home in Norwalk has had all its plumbing changed this past summer, simply on account of the chlorine. That's what makes your hot water boilers leak, too."

"It is said that the new filtration plant now being built will overcome all this trouble in the future, as chlorine will not then be used."

EDITORIAL

There are some in the Plymouth School who are not playing the game. What do we mean by this?—That some are not observing the rules which the 1926-27 Rule Book has ordained. The laws enforced by the referee may be disregarded.

Perhaps it is a personal foul you have committed, an act which offends others as well as yourself.

Your own team as well as the opponent. An act of your own always affects another.

Then, it may be a misplay. Perhaps you have for a time lost sight of your ideals, your goal, and a point has been scored against you. However, it is not possible to come good play to rectify.

The crowd that watches will never back you unless you are worthy. It is up to you to turn their opinion. Stop! Are you out of bounds?

Musical Try Outs

Mr. Berry has been conducting a series of tryouts for the Musical Club, which will hold a concert March 24. Boys and girls are being given chance to try out for the various soloists and solo numbers which will be on the program. Mr. Berry is hoping that there will be a great many contestants in these solo numbers, as well as in the other parts of the program.

United We Stand Divided We Fall?

There has been a great deal of discussion along this line in P. H. S. lately. It concerns the class or classes in English literature. Many students wish to have only one such class in which case about thirty pupils, Juniors and Seniors, would be together. Others contend that separate classes for Juniors and Seniors would be of greater value than a single class. To date, no decision has been reached and both methods are in use, alternately.

Accident

Excitement reigned in the assembly room at P. H. S. Monday, after school, when a boy sat-seat, fell beneath the load of Ruth and Jim. Unable to withstand the pressure, the old seat will now be replaced by a lab chair, unfortunately only large enough for one. We wonder if Jim will secure another lab chair or move to the next seat holding Dorothy as occupant.

Course in Journalism

The Staff of the P. H. S. Post has decided to take up the study of newspaper editing and writing, a book written by Meyer, Professor of Journalism at University of Wisconsin. At each weekly meeting the report of one chapter is given. This will be combined until the book is completed.

The class discussed this week concerned the general work in the subject is "Getting the News."

We are trying to make these meetings and our paper beneficial to the staff as well as interesting to the readers.

Any suggestion that any reader has to offer, and any text on Journalism will be appreciated.

Impromptu Entertainment: All American Revue

The original all American Revue, scheduled as first entertainment fall to arrive Monday night, but as a substitute the impromptu review presented by P. H. S. students ended by Mrs. Jenkins, proved a novel hit.

The Glee Club sang and their program was spicy with variety school songs, church songs, popular songs, old songs, new songs. Now and then the audience joined in. Solos, duets, trios and quartets came next.

Robert Shreck and his saxophone relieved the strain on the singers and Mrs. Jenkins gave some very interesting readings. Although many were disappointed that the much heralded Revue failed to materialize, most of the audience, especially the students thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

Another number will be added to this one. The best numbers in the informal program were the vocal selections by Bill Caldwell and the clever impersonations by Mrs. Jenkins.

My Air Castles

When I entered Ohio State University in the fall of 1920, I held many objectives before me. My folks were very much interested in my prospective engineering course, and, of course I was also. But, deep down in my heart I was looking forward to something else. Had I ever told anyone, had I expressed any interest or desire to play football, as I knew just what to expect in reply to any such question. However, so far as I was concerned, that was why I went to college.

In my Freshman year, during the football season, I was on the faculty engineering lecture that a "Football" could possibly be connected with. There was a "wealth of material" available, such as methods of the game, what was a "good" football man. Thus I received many little attention in that I was just one of many players through my participation. I continued on and, before the season was over, I broke into a game or so, not long enough to distinguish myself, but just the same I was in there, trying everyone of those few precious moments.

In my Sophomore year of course, I was right out for the O. S. U. varsity, with the exception of the football season previous. I was given a "second-year" suit and permitted to participate in scrumming, but never did Dr. Wilcox call for "Clem" to warm up. I was not much warmer, but just the same I was satisfied to set out there in my "uniform" as a member of the squad. I felt positive that my chance had come.

Oh, another year has slipped by and I entered O. S. U. listed as a Senior. I had become quite a favorite to the Professors and, in turn, I had credited it to my refraining from athletics and outside work. They told me that I could never do the work that I was asked to do if I was not in shape. Just the same I was right with the "eleven" and the dozen other dozens which were there also, every afternoon and for two weeks of practice was given a varsity uniform and given the title of second string varsity end. Thus things went along fine for the rest of that season and finally the day of the big game approached. At our final "skull practice" coach Wilcox concluded with his praise and thanks to those who had braved back and tried for the collective line-up for the three elevens that would dress and appear at the field. I was feeling pretty airy and wanted to be up to the mark and come out there as my (none of FUNCTIONAL inactivity of the kidneys permits a return of waste products in the blood. Symptoms of this toxic condition are a dull, languid feeling, droopy head-ache and sometimes, toxic back-ache and dizziness. These statements are made during this Hoover Week — a week during which we are making a strenuous effort to point out the difference between a New Hoover and an ordinary "vacuum cleaner."

May we show you, by really cleaning a rug for you? Won't you telephone us — tell us when to call? Do not feel under any obligation, for there will be no whatever. The New Hoover, complete with Dusting Tools, now only $6.25 down!
