

Community Picnic Next Thursday at Ruggles Beach

Chamber of Commerce is Outing; Expect Good At- tendance.

Plans are being formulated by the Chamber of Commerce for a community picnic, which it is to be held at Ruggles Beach next Thursday, August 19.

It is probable that most all business houses will close at 10 o'clock in order that proprietors and employees might be able to attend the picnic on time.

It is likely that all machines and trucks will meet in front of the chamber of commerce rooms and the motor cavalcade will travel together to Ruggles. Each family will carry a full basket, and the large picnic tables at Ruggles will be the scene of the community dinner. Billions and squawks will be given to the children and plenty of amusements for the grownups. Bathing in Lake Erie will no doubt be the principle attraction in the afternoon.

The invitation is extended to the farmers in this vicinity as well as those who reside in town. It is expected that the Fate-Root-Heath Co. employees will be given the opportunity to be present at this event. However, it is not definitely known whether or not the entire factory will be closed for the day.

This will be an opportune time for everyone to get a real day's rest, and you are assured of a delightful and cooling lake breeze, so just start to plan now and be ready to join the crowd next Thursday. You'll find a lot of fun in this sort of community spirit.

Late Reports Give Cooper Majority Over Brown for Republican Nomination

Myers Y. Cooper, Cincinnati business man and organization candidate for the Republican nomination for governor, early Wednesday had assumed a lead of approximately 16,000 votes over Thad H. Brown, secretary of state and his closest opponent.

This lead was based upon returns from 8,354 of the approximately 8,600 precincts in the state. These returns included practically complete figures from the urban centers and only partial reports from the rural sections.

What the rural vote generally was regarded as a toss up, Cooper's dry strength, based on his endorsement by the Anti-Saloon League, was off set at least somewhat by the power of Brown's personal organization in many of the agricultural counties.

Runs True to Form

Foregone conclusions that Governor Donahy would be re-nominated on the Democratic ticket with a preponderant plurality proved to be well founded. The governor, with returns received from 4,751 precincts, was leading A. P. Sandies, his nearest opponent, almost 8 to 1.

Chances of Ohio's being the first state to be represented in the United States senate by a woman appeared to have been dissipated. Florence E. Allen, state supreme court justice, and candidate for the Democratic nomination for United States senator, seemed to have been decisively defeated by Altee Pomerene, former senator and Cleveland attorney.

Raid Elks Picnic

The latest sensation concerning prohibition raids is that of the Elks picnic, which was strictly disturbed by dry officers last Monday. The affair was in progress at the Middletown Canoe Club on the Miami river, when dry officers swooped down upon the party. Many bottles were thrown into the river, and other evidence was noted.

This act upon the part of dry officers is a cause for another investigation, and reports are said to be in the hands of the governor.

A COMMUNICATION

In last week's issue of The Advertiser it was stated that nearly every business house in Plymouth was contributing toward the support of the weekly band concerts. It is a pleasure to believe that would be well to publish a list of the contributors so that our people could see just who are supporting this measure. However, I wish to state that there are ten business houses at present not contributing ANYTHING to the band. Included in this list is one grocery and another that only gives $5.00 for the season while the other grocers give $1.75 per week. One merchant gave for the first four concerts but has refused to give since. Another merchant refused the first three concerts but is giving $1.00 a week since.

We pay the Reformatory Band no more than we paid the Ganges band yet our business houses are not contributing as much as last year and year before. However the concerts will be continued throughout the summer and the fellows who are contributing will see that there is no deficiency. I might add that a number of the first contributors have increased their amounts.

Reunion Ciceronian Society and Community Picnic to be at Guina Corners, Aug. 15

The annual reunion of the old Ciceronian Literary Society and community picnic will be held in the Baptist Church yard at Guina Corners Sunday August 15.

This reunion is held each year in honor of a literary society which was organized at this place about fifty years ago and is free to all who care to attend.

A picnic dinner will be served at noon after which a short program will be given.

Old teachers and pupils of Guina school are especially urged to attend this meeting. Come early and bring well filled baskets.

The Ciceronians will be in their conclave this coming Sunday, August 15 at the Guina church, north New Haven. The tables laden with the bounties of generous homes, will be spread at the noon hour. After the banquet and visiting hour, a spirited program will be called about two o'clock. You will have plenty of evidence showing plenty of fellowship, that existed during the activities of this historic literary society.

The officers are not limiting the attendance to any one. If you wish to spend a profitable afternoon on next Sunday, drive out to the Guinea church and "set in" and listen. If you have a song speech or recital, see the secretary, Lelia Heller Wilson, and she will give you a place on the program. It would not be out of place to pack your basket and bring your friends and join the banquets in the shade. C. C. Palmer of Dayton, Ohio, Dorc C. Curtis of Mich., Dr. C. F. Noble of Toledo no doubt will tell us of his trip around the world. Come!

Band to Be Feature At State Fair

300-Piece Organization Will Furnish Music During the Entire Week.

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Because of the success attending last year's effort in assembling a 300-piece band from among the most proficient musicians of the state's high school bands, Director of Agriculture, Chas. V. Truax, has completed arrangements for another organization of similar nature for the Ohio State Fair, August 30 to September 4.

First step in the selection of the young musicians was taken several months ago during the high school band contest held at Mansfield. At that time assistants to Director Truax were present and tentative selection of scores of high school lads were made for the purpose of assembling the State Fair band.

J. W. Walwright of Fostoria has been in charge of enlisting the band members. He will direct the organization during the week's program at the Ohio State Fair.

Mr. Walwright is known over the county as director of Fostoria's 50-piece high school band, which has won national honors in competition with similar bands.

The young musicians will be brought to Columbus a day or two before the opening of State Fair and in a series of practice sessions will be "whipped" into shape for their State Fair week engagements. The lads will be housed in a tent city on the grounds. Here they will eat and live for the entire week.

MEXICO'S PROBLEM

The eyes of the world are turned on Mexico. The news dispatches would indicate to the average reader that it is a fight between the government of Mexico and the Catholic church. There are several things that should be borne in mind in considering the situation in Mexico. The first is that the people of Mexico are virtually all Catholics. The Protestant organizations of Mexico have relatively few adherents—but Mexico has always been Catholic, and unless immigration changes it or this catastrophic episode breaks the bonds between Rome and Mexico, it will continue to be Catholic.

One would imagine to read the discussion that the President of Mexico was hostile personally to the Catholic church. We understand that President Calles is a member of the Catholic church and that the contest rather than a contest between two branches of Christian faith like the Protestant and the Catholic, is a contest between the government and the church. The constituent elements of each being largely, if not entirely, Catholic. The same laws and regulations that have been passed in Mexico apply to all religious sects. It applies to the Presbyterian, and the Methodist as well as the Catholics and Episcopalians. Of course it does not apply to the Presbyterians or the Methodists as it does the Roman Catholic. The reason is that their membership is small; their holdings of property are negligible so that the rules and regulations which they must observe are not irksome and to the church at large, a matter of small importance. But it is of vast importance to a church that owns the property and has the control as the Catholic church has in Mexico to observe a law of purpose of which, according to the government, is to prevent aliens from owning property and to gain that property for the natives who are pretty much in a state of deprivation, would not mean much to any church property or probably none; but it means a vast deal to one that has much property.

The following is a list of the Mexican law summarized:

1. No foreigner may exercise the religious profession in Mexico.
2. Education must be given in official schools and be secular. No religious corporation or minister of any creed may establish or direct schools of primary instruction.
3. Religious orders, convents, and monasteries will be dissolved.
4. Any minister who incites the public to refuse to acknowledge public institutions or to obey the laws will be severely punished.
5. No publication, either religious or merely showing marked tendencies in favor of religion, may comment on national political affairs.
6. No organization may be formed whose title has any word or any indication that it is connected with religious ideas.
7. Political meetings may not be held in churches.
8. All religious acts must be held within the walls of a church.
9. No religious order of any creed may possess or administer property or capital.
10. The churches are the property of the nation. Other ecclesiastical properties, such as bishops' palaces, houses, seminaries, asylums, colleges, convents, and all buildings constructed for religious purposes, pass into the possession of the nation, the use to which they are to be put to be determined by the Government.
11. Heavy Penalties may be imposed upon ministerial or other authorities who fail to enforce the above provisions.

There are two or three items in this list to which we would call attention. One of them is the fifth article and the other is the seventh. They are parts of the same thing. This would smack of tyranny and a denial of the right of people to criticize the government. We cannot imagine how the failures of that Government can be remedied, but we note in a dispatch of President Calles to the New York Times that there is a somewhat different reason and there is not a denial of criticism.

In this statement, he says:

"We have a real curiosity to know what self-respecting Government would tolerate in any country attacks in the churches upon its Constitution its laws and upon its Governors."

Prohibition of Churches in Politics

We, ourselves, tolerate attacks of every kind very often in tribunes that are not religious in character, that is to say, in newspapers, in social meetings or in places in which advantage is not taken of a state of religious conscience which always implies almost passive obedience and special meekness and in which there can be no controversy concerning the ideas expressed by the priest.

The law forbids the forming of political groups whose titles may have qualifications that relate them with confessing religion. That is to say, there cannot be a political party that would call itself the Catholic Party, or the Protestant Party, although the Protestants and Catholics have a perfect right—and they exercise it constantly—to group themselves in political organization.

"The only thing that we wish to avoid is that with the designation of the name of the Church the political fight should take on the character of a religious fight with the resulting passionate manifestations."

He then proceeds further to say:

"For the impartial observer or the intelligent critic this disposition protects the Catholics, since with the overwhelming liberal majorities of the organized political groups in our country the defeat of the Catholic candidate would be almost certain by the fact of the religious denomination of his party."

It would appear, according to his statement, that he was endeavoring to prevent that peculiar power of political criticism that is loaned to any ecclesiastical body when it speaks on matters of politics.—Bucyrus Telegraph Forum.

The Chicago Daily News calls attention to the fact that one reason the National League baseball club of that city dropped from second to fourth place recently was that a certain star player on the team was guilty of drunkenness and failure to keep in condition. The player was suspended and no longer was a Chicago unit. The News adds:

"If other players are guilty of similar infractions of discipline they should be dismissed at once. Drunken players win no ball games.

The latter statement is certainly true. Baseball has become an exact science and to be a winner in his chosen profession the player must keep in first class condition all the time. What right living will accomplish is abundantly shown in the case of Walter Johnson.

And what is true of baseball is true, of course, of all other walks of life in which there is keen competition. This is so well established that repeating it seems like uttering a truism. But there has been so much discussion of the effectiveness of prohibition of late and so much politics played with the question pro and con that we are in danger of losing sight of the main issue. The thing to be kept in mind first of all is that no man, whether he favors constitutional prohibition or whether he believes some other regulation more effective, can gain any fact that to be efficient and reliable we must keep from getting drunk.

Curtains are pieces of cloth hung at the windows to keep the neighbors from knowing when you're watching them.—Akron Beacon-Journal.

Young People of Richland Religious Council Meet

The Young People's Division of the Council of Religious Education of Richland County, held their first annual picnic at the "Devil's Punch-bow" Park, near Mansfield, on last Saturday, August 7. The county is divided into six districts. The spirit of co-operation was very fine and means larger things for the future. The young folks met at the Presbyterian Manse on East High Street and motored to the Park at Mansfield where the other Districts met with them. A picnic dinner was served which every one enjoyed to the utmost capacity. After which a play was staged by the young people from District number one, which, because of its originality and humorous hits, was most heartily enjoyed by all present. An improvised orchestra from District number one furnished the music while the play was being rendered. At the close of the play the other districts loudly applauded the members of District number one.

Mr. Maxwell, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Mansfield led in the athletic sports and games. These games were very interesting and highly enjoyed. As a parting song the members from District number one sang—Brighten the District where you are, Brighten the District where you are, Some discouraged District. You may give a little jar. Then, brighten the District where you are.

The young people desire to thank

Mrs. J. W. Miller for her suggestions and her interest in training the members from District number one for the program that was rendered. The President desires to thank all who co-operated in making the day a big success. Special designed caps were worn by the members of District number one.

From all outward appearance, no one could tell from that particular Sunday School any one came. It was a union picnic of young people from sixty three Sunday Schools. The spirit of co-operation was very fine and means larger things for the future.

Interesting News From Shiloh

SHILOH METHODIST CHURCH
Sunday school at 10 a.m. Chas. Hamman, superintendent.
Sermon at 11. Subject: Lessons we can learn from the Flowers. Mat. 6:28-34.

Epworth League services at 8:20 p.m. There is no evening service. Only a few more Sundays until conference. A great deal unfinished business must be looked after in the next few days. Let every member fall in. There is work for all. Let us make a creditable showing at Elkhart.

We enjoyed the fellowship of Dr. Anderson last Sunday morning and were glad for the editing message he brought to us.

Now ask yourself the question: How many people do we meet along life's busy pathway, who seem to be not in touch with the church. Seemingly they are unacquainted with the influence for good emanating from the church. If you meet such a one, point out to them the historical facts, that Godly men, leaders in state and community, in the past as well as the present age, found a life time far too short in which to tell what the church really means to the world. The most eager, restless spirits, such as the famous Cardinal Newman, unable to find a resting place, though they sought it with tears, found in the Church of Christ that rest for the soul, which they craved. The man of the world may be so sincere, yet does he not know the full value of the church, until he enters its fold. He may be a scientist of note, a philosopher respected, a student of world's happenings, yet he utterly will fail to sense the significance of the church from the ranks of those outside. To such a one we say: Look at the wonderful tasks performed by holy consecrated men and women, who have followed the footsteps of their great leader. Look at the great changes in dark Africa, fever laden India, starving China, the uttermost his opinion, he will become a convert parts of the earth and if unbiased in to the church. Let him study the helpful ministrations of the church to all conditions of men, and if honest with himself he will be anxious to enter the ranks of that vast host that unnumbered by man, comes from every race, continent and clime, rich poor, high, low, all attempting to add their mite to the uplift of the race. Come meet us at the church of the glad hand. You are welcome.

Famous Auto Mechanics Pay Visit to Local Boy

Two brothers, Lewis and Bud Miller, 23 and 21 years of age, both racing automobile mechanics, from Monrovia, Calif., gave their friends Donald L. Crall, with whom they formerly worked in the Packard Garage of Los Angeles, Calif., a surprise by making him a week end visit.

Leaving home May 18, in a 1914 Ford, the boys reached Indianapolis in five days. While there they took part in the races, working as mechanics for Pete De Palo and Harry Lockhart. Other points they visited were, Dayton, Washington, D. C., Atlantic City, Boston, New York City, Buffalo, where they visited Niagara Falls, and Philadelphia where they visited an uncle and also attended the Sesqui-Centennial.

They arrived in Plymouth, Saturday August 7, and spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Donald Crall, at the home of Chas. Rooks west of Plymouth.

Up to this time they had covered 6000 miles having no trouble with the car only to change 27 tires in the first five days of their journey.

Leaving Plymouth on their return trip they will stop at Detroit, for the auto races which will be held Sunday August 15. Other points of interest will be Chicago and Yellowstone National Park, where they will spend several days.

ATTEMPT LIFE OF JACKIE COOGAN

The boys stated they were in no particular hurry but must be over the Rockies by September 15, on account of the early snows. They enjoyed their trip immensely but they still insist 'California is Gods Country'.

A Trip Thru Yellowstone

(By JOHN E. COK, WILLARD, O.)

We traveled at an average of 20 miles per hour. Between Lacy Creek and the Thumb we saw a bear with two cubs. A tourist from Washington stopped and fed them marshmallows. About 2:30 o'clock we reached the Thumb. Here we got a good view of the lake. We saw some more palmito, then took the Lake shore trail to Lake Junction, a distance of 20 miles. Along this trail we saw our first and only deer. We did not see the natural bridge.

At 4:00 we passed the Lake hotel, one of the largest I have ever seen. It is painted yellow and can be seen for miles. We arrived early enough to get housekeeping tents. There were 9 in our party so we had to take two tents. Each tent had two double beds. This camp is about 2 miles from the hotel. We had a warm dinner and after dinner went fishing on the Yellowstone river in a row boat. At 10:00 o'clock we had an electric storm. We met crowds of people everywhere. The tourists are a jolly lot. All conventions are laid aside on the road. They are very friendly and interesting. We asked one man from California, why he came to the Yellowstone park for sightseeing. He said, "Well, you know it is always better fishing on the other side of the river." By the way, I might say that 90% of the women wore knickers, a very convenient way to travel.

July 15. Again the day is bright and clear, the air is fresh and invigorating after the storm. We consider ourselves fortunate in not meeting with bad nor dusty trails. We left Lake Junction at 9:30 o'clock. About six miles from Lake Junction, we stopped to see the mud geysers, a very foul smelling place. These geysers throw up a strong sulphur smelling odor. Near the mud geysers, we also saw the Dragon's mouth, that large hole in the side of a hill which shoots out about a wagon box full of boiling hot water every few seconds. Everything we have seen so far in the park was plainly marked on a small board nailed to a post or tree, and in all cases the names were very appropriate.

Soon the trail enters Hayden valley. There are about 150 buses making two day tours through the park. These buses have 4 seats each and carry 12 passengers. Eight of these stopped at the mud geysers. We followed them to the Grand Canyon. There were also 7 other cars behind us. This was the largest procession we were in since entering the Park. We followed the Yellowstone river from Lake Junction to the Canyon, a distance of 14 miles.

Several creeks enter the river, at one place the creek made several figure eights it was so crooked. At 11:30 o'clock we were at the Chittenden bridge. We wanted to cross here, but a rained stopped us because traffic was too heavy on the other side. So we took the road to the left, about 1/2 mile from the bridge, after going down several steps we got our first view of the upper falls. We stood on a railed platform built out to the jutting rocks and saw the water fall 109 feet. This was a magnificent sight. An hour later we were at the Lower Falls. It is a most thrilling sight to see the water falling at a tremendous speed, and rushing to a depth of 308 feet.

We were greatly shocked to hear that two years ago a man lost control of his car and backed into the river, dashing both himself and his wife to an awful death over the falls. We had had to go down 494 steps to see the Lower or Greater Falls. I had to carry my luggage and three days later my legs still ached. Still I would be willing to do it again, but would advise, if possible, to leave the children at home. After leaving the Falls, we went to a point up the Canyon called Grand View. We wanted to go to Inspiration point, but the roads were being repaired and we did not care to walk the 2 miles in the hot sun. The canyon is 20 miles long. Where we were standing it was 1200 feet deep and 2000 feet across, and we could see about 2 miles in either direction. It was one of the grandest sights we have ever seen. The sun was shining brightly giving added color to the rocks, which were of every hue.

Here we also found an answer to the question we asked several times. Why the park is called Yellowstone? The most prominent color in the canyon is yellow. Words cannot describe pictures cannot do justice to the natural beauty of the Falls, river and canyon. Unconsciously, one would say "The heavens declare the Glory of God, and the firmament sheweth His handiwork."

Leaving the canyon we stopped at the tourist camp and ate lunch. After lunch we took the 10 mile trail to Norris Junction. We passed Virginia Meadow and Virginia Cascade (65-ft.) and stopped to see the geysers at Norris Geyser Basin. A board walk is laid out here because of the treacherousness of the ground. One place we stopped, the different pools, connected together, showed different colors. The sun reflecting on the ground was very sharp on our eyes almost blinding us.

We noticed that most everybody wore caps with green visors or colored glasses. We left Norris Junction at 3:20 o'clock for Mammoth, a distance of 20 miles. Along this trail

Miss Margaret Livingston Says Some Wives Deserve to Lose Their Husbands

Beautiful Star in Fox Films Production of Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown," Declares Many Women Neglect Their Appearance After Marriage and This Leads to Separations

Margaret Livingston, who has played more vampire roles than any young actress in America, is authority for the statement that fewer women would lose their husbands if they paid more attention to dress.

Miss Livingston, wearing thirty-six different frocks in "A Trip to Chinatown," Fox Films version of Charles A. Hoyt's hilarious comedy playing at the Castamba Shelby, Sunday, added that most women make the mistake of neglecting their personal appearance after marriage.

"That is the very time when they should devote the most painstaking attention to clothes," said the famous little beauty who has been called the best-dressed woman in pictures.

"The young fapper can take a chance," said Miss Livingston, "but the young matron—NEVER! She must keep up her wardrobe, if everything else fails.

"You know," she continued, with a little toss of her tittan bobbed hair, "I think some women should lose their husbands. They deserve it because of their own slovenliness. When a woman allows herself to become rym down at the heels she has no one but herself to blame if her husband begins casting eyes at pretty flappers and alluring widows.

"I have all the sympathy in the world for the woman who wants to lose her husband, but I am unable to do so, because she has not sufficient pin-money for dress. In this case, I blame the man. Still, the woman is not altogether blameless.

"One can do a great deal with a little and I know a little girl who dresses remarkably well on small means. She is an orange-packer in one of the Southern California citrus exchanges, and I think she is wholly charming. She has almost nothing—we saw The Fryng Pan, Blah spring, Twin Lakes, showing different colors, one blue and the other green, Roaring Mountain, Obsidian Cliff, altitude 7382 feet, a cliff of hard, black volcanic chert, used by Indians for arrow heads, Lemon's spring, Apollinaris spring. This water had a bitter taste, but considered very healthy. Beaver Lake and Beaver Dam, Swan Lake, Gardner lake, altitude 7582 feet, Golden Gate, Silver Gate, and the Hoodoos.

The Hoodoos are massive blocks of rock or granite piled up in a confused manner, and covering several acres. They were evidently thrown down from the surrounding mountains, probably by a violent earthquake shock. The traffic of the trail from Norris Junction to Mammoth was very heavy. The trail began to decline at Rustic Falls to Mammoth a distance of 8 miles. Many cars were unable to make the grade. In many places the trail was literally cut out of solid rock. We also passed over a bridge which was a real engineering feat. As we were winding our way down this trail we suddenly came upon Mammoth with its gold and silver Terraces, shining forth in all their ineffable glory. They were almost sublime in their beauty. Gradually we began to go down. The grade was so steep that we had to make three turns, and come down parallel with the mountain. At the foot was the Hotel and camps where we spent the night. Here also we took a swim in the Hot springs. We were told that a good program would be given in the hotel. These programs are not of a professional class, so we did not stay.

July 18. Went to the Corral to see the buffaloes, elk and a few other animals that were kept in captivity. Spent 2 hours among the terraces where hot water flows continually, coloring the banks. No doubt there is some kind of chemical in the water. After going through the Park Museum where we saw mounted animals and many of the park pictures and pressed flowers in glass. We did not see many birds in the park, but saw many strange plants and flowers.

12:00 o'clock, we left Mammoth following the river to Gardiner. 12:45 o'clock we passed through the Arch. Looking back we can say that we had had a very pleasant and profitable trip, only regretting that we could not spend more time among the beauties of nature. We, however, live in hopes that some day, we will meet again. Trusting this letter will not be monotonous, hoping you are well. Sincerely yours, but makes the most of it. "Therefore, let the woman dress her best—and thus challenge her man to find fault with her. That's one way to hold him."

COSTAR OF 'WATCH YOUR WIFE' WAITED PATIENTLY FOR MOTHER'S CONSENT

Virginia Valli, who is costarred by Universal in "Watch Your Wife," which will be screened at Shelby Castamba, Tuesday, had a difficult time getting into the movie. It was not that pro-censors did not want her, for they did. Rather it was parental objection that seemed destined to balk Miss Valli in her chosen profession.

At the end of her first year in pictures Miss Valli had done so well that the company she was with wanted her to go to New York for a picture. The family objected to such a long absence and Miss Valli, being a dutiful daughter, retired from the screen. A year later opportunity knocked again and this time parental consent was forthcoming.

"Watch Your Wife" is an entertaining domestic comedy drama. It was written by Gosta Segercrantz, well-known Swedish writer, and has been Americanized for screen purposes. The picture is filled with many little incidents of every day home life. It is marked by mirth-provoking situations and above all presents a new idea for the consideration of motion picture audiences. It is also featured by beautiful sets and gorgeous gowns.

GIRL SCOUT NOTES

The regular meeting of the Girl Scouts was held Wednesday, August 11th, with an attendance of fourteen several of the girls being away on vacations.

An election of officers was held with the following results: Secretary—Marian Dennenwirth Treasurer—Jane Bachrach. These officers will serve for six months when another election will be held. Several of the girls are assisting in their second class work and two have now passed the tenderfoot test. Madeline Smith being the last to take the test.

There has been a large aluminum pie tin and a china cake plate missing since the bake sale. They were probably left on the articles when they were sold and I will appreciate it if whoever got them will phone me so I can return them to the persons who donated the food.

The tenderfoot pins were presented to me. We had passed the test at the last meeting, so there are several proud girls wearing the little token that they are real scouts and have passed the test.

New Service Put On By Baltimore and Ohio R. R.

With a view to establishing and maintaining uniform excellence in the preparation of meals on its dining cars, the President of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad has approved the creation of the new position of Traveling Chef. Joseph Press, cook on President Willard's car, has been selected to fill the position.

Owing to the very nature of the duties of dining car chefs, scattered throughout the 5,000 miles of the Baltimore and Ohio lines, it is impracticable to call them together for instruction. At the same time, knowing the value of imparting the necessary information to the chefs on incentives in cooking that may help toward improvement in the service, the Baltimore and Ohio management has sought another way of producing the desired result.

When it was concluded that a traveling chef would meet the situation, consideration was given to the selection of the one to undertake the work in mind. In looking over the field of cooks on the dining and business cars of the Company, it was concluded that Joseph Press, the president's cook, was the proper man, because of his skill and twenty-eight years of experience.

Dining car chefs should profit by the visits of the traveling chef to the various cars. It is felt, with the result that patrons of the Company will have the benefit of the best kind of cooking and as nearly as possible uniform in all cars. Those eating on the west end of the line will have the same dishes prepared in the same way as those on the east end, and no difference from those intermediate. Many years spent in the kitchens of dining cars and business cars, and especially during the past several years on Mr. Willard's own car, have qualified Joseph Press for the new position, which is believed to be the first of its kind on any railroad. While "Joe" Press, as he is known to Baltimore and Ohio men, is skillful in the preparation of every kind of meal and expert in just the proper turn to a roast, a broil or a fry, he has won distinction as a specialist along many lines of cooking. His chicken salad has been pronounced as of the finest and, early in his career, he specialized in pumpkin pie and made this pastry so enjoyable that those who have been fortunate enough to eat it, especially railroad men who have traveled on President Willard's car, say that in this he has no peer. By the new arrangement, it is believed that the Company's dining car meals will be equal to the best anywhere, for "Joe" Press is considered by many second to none in cooking anything.

that from the side of almost every hill we passed, layers of slate and rock projected. Even the trees looked more sturdy and old. Woodlands were penetrated when only a little sunlight came through. In some parts the ground was cut with many small brooks, shallow, narrow and very clear. Most brook-bottoms were lined with stones. In many places now roads were cut from the side of hills and ascended it. Near one small town a herd of perhaps nine or ten white horses were grazing on a slope. Several natural pools were sighted between the hills. Near Wheeling, log cabins were seen quite frequently.

Just at sunset, we crossed the Ohio to the Wheeling. The track was laid through the coal yards, where things were far from clean, but for all that it was interesting. One coal station was built high on the side of a hill and from several coal piles, bunches of light-green grass was growing. Small ones were scattered about the pits, hauling great loads of coal. The huge derricks reminded one of skeletons in the half-light. The hill which we cut through on the Ohio side reminded me of what I had pictured Gibraltar to be, only it supported a more vegetation. The only discolor in the whole scene was the sun's clear reflection in that broad expanse dark, black water. We followed the Ohio for several miles then branched off into the higher hills of West Virginia.

A great number of villages were built on the side of hills in "layers," that is one street a little above another. They were very picturesque with their church and spires. Some towns were composed of no more than ten houses. In most places it seemed as though the railroad or the main trunk was the main industry. In one district the homes and towns were very deplorable. Certainly did not look like Ohio. Tumble down houses where the farm stock lived in the front yard. Near one door a bare footed woman was clearing the walk while the husband loafed on the steps.

The only bridges seen, except the ones we crossed were very shaky looking and the majority marked dangerous. A type of climbing vine spread over some trees, making it so dark that one could not see distinctly. One doesn't realize what a modern village Plymouth is. Some of those half deserted towns are seen. After dinner cards and other games were started and in various ways we were entertained during the evening. Several soldiers joined our group and we learned the highly intellectual trench game of "cootie." We were then several tunnels and almost all located as all windows were closed. Later in the evening Gov. Donahy came then and shook hands with every one. About 10:30 berths were made. However I decided to sit up and see the Appalachians. The rather sleepy I succeeded. They were beautiful by moonlight but not up to my expectations. They are high compared to most hills we are used to but most done are rounded and covered with trees and low shrubs. About 2 a.m. I decided it would be better to sleep than look.

When the alarm clock rang the next morning, the white dome of the capitol at Washington could be seen from where the train was parked in the yards. Evidently it had recently been as the trees surrounding it showed a vivid green against the white. Not a trace of grim or sort of political, national, or international argument could be detected. We were not off board for further investigation.

At 7:00 a.m. we entered Maryland. It was unanimously decided that this state certainly goes to the extreme. It seemed as if all buildings were either very new or very old. The land was beautiful and the few true Colonial houses unusually artistic. Of course we only passed the back doors of the towns but it seemed that most yards were used for dumping grounds. Our tracks was laid thru Baltimore like the original. Several states had patterned after the homes of the first President, they went to the White House, as did Ohio. Our building was a reproduction of the colonial home of Harrison. It was not so elaborate, quite plain in fact, but with a wide lawn about it, it appeared home-like. It proved convenient, especially the writing room was used as our headquarters when on the grounds.

Illinois, right next door to us, was a white structure observing the Grecian lines. Large fluted pillars enclosed a circular court in front. The back walls, inside the court were of a dull gold orange. Each pillar was topped with a half ear of golden corn each grain showing distinctly, which was based in huaks of light green. The architecture of their building was far superior to ours; yet Ohio was the more suitable for the occasion.

New Jersey's building was a reproduction of an old home and Inn occupied by a British General, during the Revolution. It was of stone, permanent, and so planned as to surround a square garden on three sides around the sides, overlooking the garden, was a white balustraded balcony. Colonel Lames greeted you at the door, seemingly reminiscent of the famous flower gardens of the court.

Pennsylvania's buildings were pronounced the covered ground portico, surrounding a court, was supported by short pillars and reminded me of the old Spanish type of architecture used in missions; but the building itself was much larger in comparison to the court, was the key stone shaped pool. The central top and front of the structure was of stained glass design and more than enhanced it interior. The exhibitions inside were devoted to the work and products of Pennsylvania. One set of one large room was devoted to the forest product of the Keystone State. In one section of a ground bank was the woods of yesterday; in the second section, the forest of today and in the third section was the solution of the problem. The trees were artificial; the machinery was twigs and small branches of the pines. In a second room, a theatre scene program was given to social welfare, the forest, etc. Other exhibitions were coal, lumber, of botany, etc.

Interesting as these buildings are, it would take a volume for all description. In India, in my estimation surpassed all other nations in her representative. It was a facsimile of the "Taj Mahal," the great tomb built by an Indian Prince for his wife. It is a mammoth white structure and can be seen from almost any point of the Sequi. At night, tiny red fires gleam from each of the many towers. As one enters the odor of Indian tea and incense is almost stifling. It is very bizarre. Every phase of the Oriental handwork is centered in a separate booth. Each stall seems to reflect a different color scheme. There were rugs of intricate design and inconceivable dimensions. Rugs seemingly minute and others of immense size. One large silver jar, handwork, sold at $5000. Here plates and trays of beaten gold and silver, inlaid with red stone or turquoise, were offered for sale beside boxes and vases of sandal-wood, carved or hand painted. Perfumes of every odor, Indian cloth that sold at exorbitant prices. Tapestry covered three sides of many small rooms. Precious stones, cut and uncut, were offered. Above all noise could be heard the voices of the salesman, whom we considered quite ludicrous when compared to those clerks we are used to. In the very center of the building is a restaurant, shut in from all parts by huge hand painted screens, representing the familiar Indian or oriental fairy tales. No white linen covered the tables, which were made very artistic by low bowls of roses. Flower girls peddled their wares. No electric fans were seen. Huge rectangular boards were suspended from the ceilings, and from which hung huge hand plates of heavy wooden woods. Colored ropes fastened to them and it is dusk, huge spotlights concealed in the shrubbery, throw varied colored lights on the entire front. Small rectangular niches were light blue; other lights were also of pastel tint. The model Post-office was one of the chief attractions of the interior. The service was quick and accurate, and everything seemed at hand, but time was so limited that detailed observation was impossible. Many states had grain exhibits here; southern states exhibited cotton or their characteristic products, western territory exhibited its mineral wealth, etc. The different styles of houses and homes, shown by the state buildings, were very interesting to me. West Virginia had the exact reproduction of Washington's Mt. Vernon used for a lunch and tea room. A wide lawn with shrubbery separated it from the street, and flowers made it seem more but we might just as well have gone around it as we passed most of the way thru tunnels and subways, between high banks and a solid hard wall. We didn't see a bit of that city except the railroad yards.

Maryland is not so different from Ohio, except for the larger bays and rivers. The top of the land is practically the same. Corn and other land products are more advanced there than at home.

Colonial homes, Northern and South seemed in disrepair. It is a shame that nothing can be done to preserve the remaining ones from like sight. In one instance two Jersey cows were peacefully browsing on the front lawn of a once aristocratic and beautiful place.

Towards Philadelphia both roads and houses were better cared for. Most forest floors now were covered with large granite or smooth stone boulders.

Brick and tile kilns were very numerous, great mounds of mud and clay. We were ushered thru the back door of Philadelphia, about 8:30 and parked, so it was supposed, in the "Cathart Center." In front of us lay abreast the Burekies walked miles, so we judged, to the Centennial grounds. The streets were uneven and spotted with mud puddles so that by the time we reached the entrance gate it was rather an uneven and bumpy line.

The first gate was a huge production of the Liberty-Bell, the wooden hanger forming the two side posts. It was mammoth. The entire structure was wired so that at night it was lit with light. On the inside and outside around the gigantic clapper were thirteen stars, bearing the names of the thirteen colonies, each lighted by an electric bulb.

After waiting almost an hour in the scorching hot sun, for the Governor and most of the cabinet and other high officials (brought him) and the Cleveland Gray it began to rain. "When it rains, it pours." The only shelter was the Liberty bell and that proved large enough to accommodate our party of about 300, now thanksgiving when the Governor at last came, a flag raising commemorated Ohio Day. At the Ohio Building all Ohioans were welcomed by a representative of the Governor of Pennsylvania, the mayor of Philadelphia and others of high office.

After much thanksgiving when the Governor at last came, a flag raising commemorated Ohio Day. At the Ohio Building all Ohioans were welcomed by a representative of the Governor of Pennsylvania, the mayor of Philadelphia and others of high office. After the newspaper and silver screen camera man had "done" us, there was not one but who was ready for lunch. During the afternoon we divided in to small groups and toured the grounds.

The roads, making an enormous web of the centennial city, were of asphalt, and varying from twenty to forty feet wide. Between the streets and the gravel side walks, in plots of grass, around six foot broad, trees have been planted. They have not attained one third of growth they greatly improve the looks of the place. Between each building and the walk, was usually a plot of grass, with shrubs or flowers in design.

The varied architecture and color schemes make a place of vividness. People of every race, every class make it cosmopolitan. Each state in the Union is given space for a building which is dedicated to that state. Many have been erected and each represents its territory in a specific way. Each nation that has not attained one third of growth they greatly improve the looks of the place. Between each building and the walk, was usually a plot of grass, with shrubs or flowers in design.

The grounds are so extensive and the buildings so numerous that one cannot hope to see all in one day. On the left, on entering, is the administration building. It requires at most ten minutes to walk from one to the other, so large is it. In exact center a type of half roofed court is in concave formation. At the top design of the figures of Freedom, Justice, Honesty and the American Eagle are lighted by spotlights, showing a conglomeration of color. Between the walk and the foundation, are rose gardens, beds of low shrub, small pine fern, trees. As soon as it is dusk, huge spotlights concealed in the shrubbery, throw varied colored lights on the entire front. Small rectangular niches were light blue; other lights were also of pastel tint.

The model Post-office was one of the chief attractions of the interior. The service was quick and accurate, and everything seemed at hand, but time was so limited that detailed observation was impossible. like the original. Several states had patterned after the homes of the first President, they went to the White House, as did Ohio. Our building was a reproduction of the colonial home of Harrison. It was not so elaborate, quite plain in fact, but with a wide lawn about it, it appeared home-like. It proved convenient, especially the writing room was used as our headquarters when on the grounds.

Illinois, right next door to us, was a white structure observing the Grecian lines. Large fluted pillars enclosed a circular court in front. The back walls, inside the court were of a dull gold orange. Each pillar was topped with a half ear of golden corn each grain showing distinctly, which was based in huaks of light green. The architecture of their building was far superior to ours; yet Ohio was the more suitable for the occasion.

New Jersey's building was a reproduction of an old home and Inn occupied by a British General, during the Revolution. It was of stone, permanent, and so planned as to surround a square garden on three sides around the sides, overlooking the garden, was a white balustraded balcony. Colonel Lames greeted you at the door, seemingly reminiscent of the famous flower gardens of the court.

the shops of the weavers, the copper smiths; the home of the snake charmer with her weird music; the dancers; the potagers; the camera that peered the narrow enclosure and donkeys brayed in a nearby corral. From this scene you might understand how oriental people live in such congested quarters. The horsemanship of the riders was wonderful; their desert horses were picturesque.

The aviation field was well populated. Six aeroplanes were sent up each day in "V" formation over the grounds. A great silver balloon carried passengers hoity.

The army display was not half so interesting in us as the Navy, as it was incomplete. As the Sequel was held near the Delaware, war vessels, merchant marines and submarines could be held in display. The submarine was explored from periscope to flag pole. It seems incredible that so many men could live in such small space. Descending from deck to interior down the straight ladder, isn't half as bad as one expects. Machinery is everywhere and every bit is kept polished. In winter the interior should be pleasantly warm, for in summer it is suffocating. The kitchen is the roomiest room of all.

We boarded and explored admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, used in the battle of Manila. We expected something rather antic and were surprised to find it so modern. The war of 1812 gave the battleship "Constitution" to the Sequel. The old rope ladders, broad deck, blunt nose, reminded one of the old sea rowing shown in "Down to the Sea in Ships." The deck was as spotted white as a good housewife's kitchen floors. The Captain remarked that someone was scrubbing all the time.

The center of the entire exhibition was High Street. It was a street shut off from the rest of the grounds, and of old colonial and historical homes were there. Little tan and brown houses, yet quality inviting, smiling across at each other, so homey were they. There was Franklin's house and the home with the first slate roof. The homes of other noted men; plain and old Quaker meeting house; the town-hall, houses where Washington had resided, an old tavern, Washington's stables; there were quaint old gardens of 150 years ago. Query phase of the old coaches for romance in place of savings are very noticeable.

there; a town erler in green with his historic stick and hat, cried the hour with an "All's Well" and then proceeded to walking the street to newcomers.

All homes, of course, were furnished with old furniture; quaint old china; ruffled curtains at the windows. In old High street you were not in 1926, but in 1776.

Of course there was much more to the Centennial but even had we allowed another day, the entire grounds could not have been covered.
