TIME EXTENDED TO PAY TAXES

A report just received from Kent Woodward, Huron county treasurer, states that the tax notices were not mailed much before the 1st of the 1930 of January. Time for payment will be extended until February 1st, at least, depending on the date the notices are put in the mail.

The delay caused by the many specials having to be placed upon the tax duplicates in the auditor's office, makes it impossible for earlier tax payment.

BURGLARS VISIT SHILOH STORES

Intruder Given Title Of "Meanest Hobo" After Two Stores Report Loss

Shiloh, Dec. 18.—Sometime Friday night, burglars broke into the supply room of the G. W. Shaffer grocery store...

The person, or persons, ran the chance of being discovered, as both business places are near the corner of town, near the hotel, and as lights burn in front of the buildings all night.

Evidence points to a hobo, a sump-crop being erident this year, who has spent the night in the town bastille.

On Saturday night the teams go to Lexington for two exciting games.

TRAPPERS TO FIND LOW PRICE FOR FUR

Those Huron and Richland county residents who propose to brave the elements for the purpose of trapping this winter will be disappointed to learn that the price of fur pelts has dropped to a very low figure.

Fifty cents is about the top figure that can be obtained for the muskrat pelt.

It is believed by county authorities that the drop in price will discourage trapping and give the fur bearers a chance to increase in number.

JUDGMENT ASKED IN $40,540 SUIT BY FORMER RESIDENTS

Judgments totalling $40,540, are asked at Fremont in personal injury suits against Ray Baumhardt, of Amberg, and Elmer C. Oms of Gibsonburg.

TAX FIGURES FOR 1930 ARE GIVEN

Stitches of the county Treasurer's office were busily engaged Thursday in completing reports necessary for the collection of 1930 taxes.

The first call for the first half of the 1930 taxes, Treasurer Charles explained. He advised that anyone wishing a statement by mail should write to his office, giving a proper description of the property, and a statement will be sent by mail.

Personal property abstract not including public utilities in Richland county aggregated $25,035,214.95, as released late last week by County Auditor Arthur S. Beck.

Individual classifications for 1930 gain or loss from 1929 follow:

Individual personal property 1930 $5,798,730. Decrease of $68,545. Banks—1929—$2,949,140. Incorporations including banks, 1930—$1,237,177. Decrease of $56,000.

The report lists 125,051 cattle in 1930 valued at $589,520; an average of $33 per head. In 1929 the total number of cattle was 17,007 valued at $733, an average of $43 per head.

Motor and other vehicles in the 1930 report are valued at $2,496,185. In 1929 the figure was $2,574,335.

The duplicate of real property will be approximately unchanged from 1929. The 1930 report will show a change will be due to building activities in 1930.

FRED WALDHAUS IS YET IN HOSPITAL

Mr. J. G. Waldhaus, of near Boughtonville, left Saturday morning for Quincy, Illinois, to be with his son, Fred, who was severely injured last August.

While visiting with relatives the boy stepped in front of an auto, suffering a skull fracture and was taken to a hospital for some time. It was recently learned that the bone in one of his legs did not mend properly and must be broken again. It will be necessary to wire the bone together to hold, and the lad will be put in a cast for several more months.

Friends of the boy, and his parents, are deeply concerned over his condition, and are hoping to assist him to recovery with their best wishes.

dreams, I knew I would have in quit that day, I felt so—it seemed so though." He paused, stumbled on with courage. "It just seemed to me—a woman in a man's dress—was one's arms—so generous—so lovely; and then, suddenly, there are a house, and a car, and children, and nurse maids, and cooks, and I'm not a sand things—just suddenly, I shouldn't have felt so—I fought it—but it got me. I'm telling you you asked me."

"How ever was it?"

"I knew, Will—not just that way, but I knew—that's why I've been saving and been silent—that's why I didn't tell you any question. But Will, I love you, it's the biggest thing in the world to me, Will. It means to me what these pictures—what this work means to you. I'm not a writer—I'm not even artistic—but I know what your work means to you, because I love you. And when you shut me out, Will, it was for me just as it was for you when you were shut out from your work. I want you to be happy." She was solemn, young, uplifted, filled with the love of a woman, and her face a blurred and lovely picture seen through tears.

"Dear heart, what does the money mean? Why, Will—ever more than the children—yes, though I ought not say it—more than the children, than my people, than myself. You've told me you'll give me the best for a little while, for one dark time. I was jealous of your work—of your love for it. But not any more, Will. I want you to have your work, I want you to have your work. There isn't any conflict between your desire and mine, Will, or your future and mine, because I want what you want."

"Your face began to shine. He reached up, took her hand and held it. "Ernestine," he whispered, and stopped at the leaned forward, her head against his shoulder, her face hidden so, while she went on swiftly: "Will, I knew you were tired of the cats. Will, I spent only about a third of what you earned, last year. But you wouldn't tell me, you didn't want to talk to me, so I just went ahead, planning for the time when you would. I knew that you wouldn't want, probably wouldn't take, the money I'll have from grandmother and from papa, some day. But this is now—it's savings from your earnings, Will, it's for your stake."

"You understand," he said hoarsely. "Will," she said again, and now her arm was around his body, the picture up between his shoulders. "I'll tell you again—I—"

"No, no, Ernestine," he said with quick passion, "you can't tell me; we can't go back. Do you know what it means? A living—I think I could make that—but it will be dangerous—I've been into it all with some thought. It will be years before I can make even half what the cartoons bring me. Even if I get started, I don't know where the money to be found—I've thought it all out. I've been up and down and around this problem. I've tried to give some of my work to you, it's precarious—it's too scanty. I've been through it all, and made up my mind. Don't tempt me with your savings—they won't last us a year."

"If we went back to the West side, back to the old home, I could do my own work, and the children and I could live on the farm until you got started. You could keep this studio, and you could go to Philadelphia and to Paris and study."

"Would you—would you do that for me? Ernestine, my wife." He kissed her, and she shook the tears from her own lashes and drew him down and pressed her lips against his eyes.

"It wouldn't be necessary for you to do that, darling," he said to her, and he laughed a little. "It wouldn't be that bad. I can make a living—and you've your trust fund, and your grandmother has promised you the house at Langley lake. No, you won't have to go back to the West side—you can keep Molly, I believe. We can manage that much, Ernestine, with good luck and good management."

"Oh, Will," she said to him, "I almost wish it would be hard like that again. I've been so lonely—longing to help you, feeling outside. What does the car and the house and the things mean if I'm cut out from you? I know I can't help you with your painting. I know that travel is yours—that's your work—your life. It must be first with you, Will. And that's right. Gifted people can't choose. But if your work must be first, to you, you can understand what love and marriage mean to me. That's my life. And if I can't do that, you can go on—because I understand."

They were both crying, his arms were around her—tight—tight. As their tears mingled, and they stood together in the long embrace, the kiss that was free from passion but fraught with tenderness, the purest and holiest feeling, true married love, washed over them. It seemed to Ernestine, straining so in his arms, that for the first time she was truly wife to Will. Not only wife, bride of his body, star of his imagination, object of romantic adoration, not only the mother of his children and the keeper of his home, but wife—in the deep places, the secret places of love.

"Ernestine," he whispered after a little, and she went across to bear him some so on his lips as he had whispered it when first they loved. "Give me—that I didn't understand, that I didn't understand in you. You seemed always to have a child in your arms, a chance made. I bet that this other was a son to you. I was stupid, blind. I thought you had much to tell each other. She laid her hand upon his arm, and said in the same low tone:

"Look at me, Will."

He looked at her—his brilliant black eyes fixed on her, and eyes—he looked at her deeply, with astonishment, and suddenly Ernestine was filled with a strange power and wisdom. She passed out of self-consciousness and was controlled and guided by deep instincts and ancient mother wisdom. She moved toward Will, put her face up to his and kissed his lips.

"Will," she said, smiling up at him, her lovely face alight with feeling, her tender mouth curved in a smile of sweetness, "Will, I love you. You forget it. You ignore it—you make love a burden instead of a support. I've seen it in the depths of your wife's mind—that low betrayed and entrapped you, instead of letting you free. Haven't you thought that?"

His arm trembled a little under her hand.

"Only once," he said, and his face flushed, "only once—the day after had made that picture." He motioned to the picture she still held in her hand. "The next day, I knew you

AFTER our complete sell-out, we wish our customers to know that our store will be restocked in a few days with Staple Furniture such as Simmons Metal Beds, Springs, Mattresses, etc., which are common, every-day merchandise in any furniture store. After the first of the year we will attend the Furniture Markets at Grand Rapids and Chicago where millions of dollars worth of furnitures represented by manufacturers from all over the United States is shown. We will start shipments at once and expect to have our large store completely restocked by the last of January. Any special order will be promptly taken care of.

About all we have left over are the pictures, mirrors and small lamps which too small to be handled at the auction. These will be sold very reasonably. We have a few back orders arriving for Christmas, not very much, but we would be pleased to have you call and look over what little we have. You may see just what you want.

The term "self-made" can again be applied to a Huron county resident. Philip E. Elias, son of the late Julius Elias, once a school boy in North Fairfield, is now the present president of the Warner and Swasey Co. of Cleveland, and considered one of the most successful business men of the city. Elias attended Ohio Wesleyan University for two years, and then began at the Warner and Swasey Co. in 1910, as a junior clerk in the auditing department. He has held the present office since 1923.

THE RIGHT KIND OF CHRISTMAS

It was Christmas. The kind of Christmas when angels sing in great cathedrals and bright colored lights shine from all the windows. But it was no Christmas at all to Ann.

"I am sorry, Ann, but I'm afraid you will not have a very happy Christmas this year," said her father very sorrowfully. So Ann had gone off to dream that the pretty toys in the store window were hers. Up the winding alleys she slowly walked until finally she came to the wide street that the toy stores were on. There was the large dolly with the pink, lacy dress that Ann had dreamed of being her own. Just then three little girls, daughters of a rich man, passed.

"There is that tricycle, Grandma promised me," exclaimed one.

"Yes and I wanted that dolly with the pink, lacy dress but Auntie said she had a much prettier one for me," complained another.

Ann sorrowfully looked after them as they walked on up the street and stopped at the next toy store to explain what they expected for Christmas.

A fierce gust of wind swept the snow from the pavement onto Ann's cold little body.

Further up the street a richly dressed lady stopped gracefully out of a toy store. Her arms loaded with Christmas gifts. As she entered her car she dropped her purse. Ann ran and picked it up and called to the chauffeur to stop, but he did not hear her and drove faster up the street. Ann looked at the purse. It was of rich Cordoba leather. But the money! It was more money than Ann had ever seen in her whole life. She could buy her a hundred pretty dollies. Like she had seen in the store window. Would she keep it or return it to the pretty lady. It was quite a temptation, all that money could be hers, still mother would not want her to do that. Ann stoutly resolved to return the money. She entered the toy store the lady had come out of, and asked for her name and address.

"Miss Joanna Petron, 7829 Vander Blvd., New York City, New York."

"That was the answer of the jolly, fat store keeper. Ann thanked him and slowly walked out of the store, Vander Blvd. Why that was the nicest street on Avalon Hill, but it was so far.

"I don't think the nice lady will care if I use some of this money for carfare."

7829 Vander Blvd. was a large mansion set in the center of a lovely garden. The thought of going to that mammoth door and knocking, made Ann afraid. The butler answered the door.

"Miss Petron in?" asked Ann in a meek frightened voice.

"Come in," invited the butler in a surprised tone.

She was led into a little room furnished for comfort. Soon Miss Petron herself, came in.

"You dropped your purse, coming out of a toy store, downtown," said Ann.

"Oh, thank you," exclaimed Joanna as she took the purse from Ann.

"Why did I leave my mother's ring in here. How careless of me! That is the most precious thing I own. It was my mother's, you know. By the way, what is your name?" she asked.

"Ann Freeman."

"What would you like most for Christmas?"

"Oh! I would love to have the dolly with the pink, lacy dress and a new coat."

"You shall have all of them. Come with me."

She led Ann down the hall to a spacious boudoir.

"Sit down," and she pointed to a chair.

Miss Petron put on her coat and hat, took Ann's hand and led her to the car. The chauffeur drove them to a large department store. The saleslady showed them many beautiful coats. Miss Petron asked Ann which she liked best.

"That beautiful fur one," admitted Ann as though she were in a dream.

Miss Petron handed it to her and said: "It is yours, my dear, for you surely deserve it."

Then they drove to the toy store.

and she bought the dolly, with pink lacy dress.

Later Ann said to her father: "Why, Daddy! This isn't such a bad Christmas after all."

"HOW THE HARPERS GOT A CHRISTMAS TREE"

It was a cold winter day, about three days before Christmas. I was riding along the country road on horse back. I was looking toward the north and I saw away in the distance a light. I told my horse to hurry up because it was getting dark. As we neared the house where the light came from, there was a bark. I looked around and there was a dog. I thought it belonged to this house whoever lived in it. I never had seen this light before or the house either. So I was getting curious. I got down from my horse and went up to the door and knocked. A woman opened the door. I took her for about 40 some years old. I asked who lived here, and she said, "I live here. My name is Mrs. Harper. I just moved here yesterday because my husband went away and I don't know where he is. She asked me what my name was. I told her Miss Van Zoest. I told her I was out riding and I saw a light out here. I thought I would come out and see who lived here. She said she was so unhappy because she didn't have any Christmas tree for her children. I went in to see her children. They were crying. I told them a story and then they brightened up. I told her mother not to worry, I would come back tomorrow. I told them all goodbyes and went home. The morning after I got up I went down town and ordered the best Christmas tree they had. Then I got a whole lot of groceries and toys and clothes and everything else I could think of. Then I put them all in a wagon and went out to the Harpers place. When I knocked Mrs. Harper came to the door. I told her not to make any noise. We would put the Christmas tree up I had brought and everything before her children knew it. After that was done we put all the toys, groceries and clothes in the cupboard and she thanked me and thanked me. And told me some day she would pay me back. I told her to have a nice Christmas and to be happy. As I was going out the door I saw a man coming up the walk. I knew it was Mr. Harper. I was so glad then because I knew they would have a happy Christmas and they didn't go without a Christmas tree after all.

Would take the woolly blankets off her little boy so I could see.

His shut-up eyes would be asleep, And he would look just like our John, And he would be all crumpled too, And have a pinkish color on.

I'd watch his breath go in and out, His little clothes would all be white, I'd slip my finger in his hand To feel how he could hold it tight.

And she would smile and say, "Take care."

The mother, Mary, would, "Take care" And I would kiss his little hand And touch his hair.

While Mary put the blankets back The gentle talk would soon begin, And when I'd uptoe softly out I'd meet the wise men going in.

THE GAZELLE

The Gazelle is an animal that belongs to the antelope family. It is small in size and has a very graceful shape. It is fawn or dun on the back and has a white belly, which is separated from the back by a black or brown band. The eyes of the gazelle are soft in expression and beautiful. The horns are twice bent and form the shape of a lyre and do not have sharp edges. It lives in the Saharan region of North Africa and lives in numerous herds. When captured young it is readily domesticated though naturally timid and wild and becomes quite tame.

SNAKES

In southern Mississippi there are a lot of snakes and all different kinds. You can't take a walk very far unless you come upon a snake.

The people that are born down there are accustomed to them and don't seem to mind them at all. But we don't like the idea of snakes.

People will be working hard out in their fields and a snake comes along they just stop to kill him and go right on working. But if we were there and had killed a snake we'd talk about it for days. If we'd kill a rattlesnake with twenty rattles on it, and three feet, seven inches long we'd be ready to tell everybody.

When the people of the south catch large rattlesnakes they like to keep the rattles for tourists to gaze upon. Rattlesnakes aren't as bad as another snake there called the Moccasin. It does not give warning like the rattle snake does. The Spreading Adder is also a dangerous snake and the Whip snake is another.

The House of Fear at Ohio, Cleveland

Laughter thrills are the chief ingredients of "The House of Fear," the mystery farce at the Ohio Theatre, beginning Christmas day. Here we have a mystery thriller made principally for laughter, yet replete with all the familiar atmosphere that pervades the mystery drama.

The author, Wall Spence, has set his story in the spooky surroundings of a medium's home, supposedly haunted. What's more, the present occupant is the second spiritualistic medium to have occupied the home. Upon the rise of the curtain, strange things happen immediately to work up the nervous tension of the audience. Mme. Zita, the presiding medium, intends, with the help of her "spirits," to track down a murderer for which her son has been wrongly accused. But all Zita's spirits are not friendly; it seems, and the more evil ones take a hand at affairs.

The results are at times hilarious and only an author with a rare idea of farce could clear up the dolga and gongs-on.

Meanwhile, the audience sits through some terrorizing moments when weird hands stretch out in the dark, horrible groans pierce forth, and knives brandish recklessly about the stage just to behold a stage clash. All in all, "The House of Fear" is a mystery play with all the potent factors to produce a thrill or a chill, and keep the audience convulsed for the greater part of the time.

Cecil Spooner is the featured member of the cast.
