TRAIN WRECKED AT GREENWICH

Brakeman Badly Injured As 23 Freight Cars Rip Through Tracks Over Embankment

As the result of a wreck occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad west of Greenwich, Sunday afternoon, Theodore H. Johnson, brakeman of New Castle, Pennsylvania, is fighting death in the Municipal Hospital at Willard.

The disaster, in which 23 freight cars were thrown off the track, according to officials was the result of a hot box, which separated the trucks under a car.

The freight was on the main line, west bound from Pittsburgh to Chicago, and was carrying salt, bricks, sugar and other general merchandise.

The train was a long one, two engines were needed to stand the strain of the pull. When the wreck occurred three lines of track were torn up.

Hundreds of people drove to view the wreck, one of the worst ever occurring in this district.

GOOD PROSPECT FOR ATHLETES AT P. H. S.

Taking everything in consideration, the outlook for athletes at P. H. S. this year would seem quite promising.

The first activity, according to Coach W. H. Moore, will feature the cross-country team.

There are changes in the team for last season, and there will be some fine additions, as some quite good men were found last year because of the age limit.

Plymouth finished in 12th place in the state meet in 1929.

Tentative meets with Mansfield and Willard are scheduled, and with other communities. Listed on the team is Coach W. H. Moore, E. E. Moore, D. Bachrach, H. Ross, L. Biddison, M. Webber, W. St. Clair, M. Hale, with additions of H. Long and P. Grimmer, expected to be good gains.

They will begin with the opening of school, in preparation for the State meet in November. No captain has been elected.

Though two good men were lost this year, Coach Bachrach and Vance Snyder, Coach Rhine is banking heavily on the boys, and is expecting much new material from the Freshman aggregation.

Games have been arranged with Norwalk, St. Paul, Attica, Monroeville and Chateaufort.

They will play at the home of Coach Bachrach, Walter Mueha, Dave Briggs, Harold Ross, Harry Long, Kenneth Myers, Taylor, Carl Gleason, De Witt, C. Scott, J. Gaskill, and Don Eisel, besides others coming up fast.

SCHOOL OPENS FOR 81ST YEAR

First Public School Opened Doors To Students in September of 1850.

Beginning the 81st year of work in educational lines, the Plymouth public schools will open Monday, September 8, for the 1930-31 term of instruction.

Since the dedication of the new high school in March, the students attending junior and senior high have been more than prompt, and justly so, of their own Alma Mater, and perhaps will begin the school work less reluctantly than in former years, as the equipment is on hand for both book and laboratory work.

Though there had been private schools in this city, the first public school was erected in 1850, with Superintendent C. L. Rogers in charge. Six teachers assisted Royce.

The aim then, as now, was to give the pupils a good, common sense education. The following faculty is announced, and plans for the year indicate the best term ever.

Superintendent—H. S. History—R. H. Miller. H. S. Principal—School Science—T. S. Commercial—James Derr.

Latin—English—Miss Helen Panol. Math. Manual Training—Merle Wolf. Music, Jr. H. S. English—Miss Leticia Foner.

Vocational Home Economics—Miss Naomi Young. Science—C. Murlin. First—Miss Stella Nye.

Second—Miss Maxine Hartel. Third—Miss Mary Sheeley. Fourth—Miss Florence Danner.

Fifth—Mrs. Harriett Gill Farrar. Sixth—Miss Ruth McCollison. Commercial, Classical, for college entrance, Vocational, Economics and Vocational Manual Training courses are offered. The library system will remain the same, as it was quite successful.

Meals will be served to the children by the girls of the Home Economics department at the beginning of the cold weather.

LEAVES FOR WESTERN TRIP MONDAY MORNING

Arthur Cornell left early Monday morning for San Diego, California. He will be in the Verne Walte, a former Plymouth boy.

Mr. Walte will spend about six weeks vacationing along the coast.

Mr. Walte will return with him for time, visiting with friends and relatives in Plymouth and vicinity.

"Data compiled in the experiment are expected to be of great importance. L. F. Warrick, state sanitary engineer, and Prof. Arch E. Cole, professor in anatomy at the medical school of the University of Louisville, Louisville, Ky., who is conducting the experiment, believe that the findings will be of material assistance in determining the degree of purification which must be effected in the utilization or treatment of industrial waste in order to prevent objectionable conditions in streams.

"Dr. Cole is working under the direction of the state committee on water pollution, created by the 1927 legislature. The committee consists of Dr. C. A. Harper, state health officer; Adolph Kanneberg, member of the railroad commission; C. A. Halbert, state engineer; L. M. Hobbins, member of the conservation commission, and Mr. Warrick.

"At present the work is in its first stage. Dr. Cole has had his tanks in operation for only four weeks. He is dealing with sulphite liquor, a waste from paper mills. His experiments with pulp and paper mill waste will consume the rest of the summer. Next summer he expects to deal with other types of industrial wastes. Complete data then will be available.

"Eight metal tanks (8 by 2 1/2 by 2) fill the little basement room in the northwest corner of the hydraulics laboratory building. Canvas curtains keep out daylight and carbon lamps keep the light in the tanks steady.

"Each tank is divided into three sections by screens. The screens and the interior of the tanks are painted to prevent corrosion. Different types of fish are in different sections of the tank. The water in the tanks is agitated continually by paddle wheels.

"Alternate tanks are aerated with compressed air.

"Two tanks contain 300 gallons of water to be used in the experiment. (Continued on Page Eight)

FRANK TUBBS RECALLS SCHOOL DAYS IN PLYMOUTH OF 1850

It was just 80 years ago that Frank Tubbs put on his best suit, and reluctantly turned towards the school house that stood in Plymouth village.

The boy was born in a log house a short distance from the four corners west of Plymouth, on the New Haven road, and his school days were in a one-room school house, the name of which was 'round, the young student started for town, barefooted.

The school house stood where the grade building is now located, but the structure then in use has been moved to the rear of the Standard Oil station, on Sandusky street, and serves as a garage, and store house.

There were four rooms in the school, Frank's first teacher was Miss Sue Sedor, who began his training in the checkerboard schooling of book and experience. The veteran, who now sits and lives over again the past, acknowledges with a grin, that he was not an angel. Standing in the corner was common punishment. The worst was that of being placed between two girls. At one time he wore a sheepskin for days so that a promised licking would not hurt—but—the action brought him more than the paddle.

There were four rows of seats in each room, and blackboards and chalk were then used. The children used slates and slate pencils for desk work. Despite his escapades, "Tubby" was popular with the girls, as he carried ivory hand-handkerchiefs for tugging out of places of bone, and distributed them.

There was no inter or intra-scholastic contests.

As Frank grew older, the social side of life was not neglected. Acknowledging that love is blind—at one time he was "hooked" on a girl, and a girl, weighing 200, was very hard on the old Wyrand farm, west of town. A resident doctor had loaned the horse to the school.

When the war cry was sounded from Washington, Tubbs left his job in the drug store, near the location of the present Webber's Drug Store, and joined the army. He served both in the infantry, and the cavalry.

gears and the girl slipped off in the snow. Tubbs was not strong enough to lift the one-horse cutter and the 200-lb. miss as well, so the girl, who was a preacher's daughter, did.

Dances were often held in a hall situated where the school house now stands. Mr. Tubbs recalls vividly dancing with Molly Hannick, then Dolly Butler, and states that she was one of the best partners he ever had.

Dances at North Fairfield were well attended by Plymouth youth.

Political celebrations in that day were in order, and after one election the Democrats had put a man in the presidential chair, an ox roast was held in the public square. The beast was put on a huge pit, and when cooked, served on forks, and washed down with cold beer.

When the school was held with lighted torches, and much shouting. It is recorded that after one election a "rank" Democratic preacher prayed in church that the Republicans would "feel all right about the victory, and understand that it was for the good of the country.

"Rank" Republican lady, left before the prayer was finished.

In the school systems of that time, "readin' and writin'" and "rhythmic" were taught to the tune of hickory cock, and plenty of hickory sticks were used. Rather often on the platform and recite a poem, Tubbs suffered a "licking." The present Mrs. Tubbs is yet the orator of the family, and at one time won a history volume in a recitation contest against the teachers and business men of the town.

When the war cry was sounded from Washington, Tubbs left his job in the drug store, near the location of the present Webber's Drug Store, and joined the army. He served both in the infantry, and the cavalry.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH WORK CONDUCTED BY ARCH COLE

The list of men and women who have gone from Plymouth into the world to achieve success and prominence in many paths of life is steadily growing.

Dr. Arch Cole, son of Mrs. Isabelle Cole of Portner Street can be added to this list. Graduating from New Haven School in 1912 he entered Ohio Wesleyan and received his A. B. degree in 1916.

Furthering his education he attended school at Madison, Wis., when he received the degree of Ph. D.

For the past four summers Prof. Cole has studied research work at Woods Hole, Mass., a school of prominence in the scientific world, which enables him to assist in the work being conducted at Madison, Wis. to aid in the streamlining of the experiment.

With the opening of school this Fall Dr. Cole will resume his duties as professor in anatomy at the medical school of the University of Louisville, Louisville, Ky.

The following article taken from the Milwaukee Journal, gives some idea of the research work he is conducting.

Madison, Wis.—Dorcas of many martyrs are giving up their lives in the University of Wisconsin hydraulics laboratory to aid science in its battle to save fish from stream pollution in Wisconsin lakes and streams.

Bluegills, perch, pickerel and bass cruise to and fro in the narrow metal tanks until their throats come to roll belly up and be fished out for post-mortem examinations which are yielding valuable information.

"These fish are the subjects of the pioneer experiment in control of pollution in public waters. Their reactions while living and the autopsies which follow their deaths are assisting men in determining whether wastes poured into streams by paper mills, tanneries and other industries are so toxic or poisonous, and what must be done to render them harmless to fish.

COLOR IN THE NEWS

There's a nerve-tingling thrill in the news that has been filtering out of northern India recently, like that in one of Kipling's master romances of adventure.

For the wild Pathan hillman of the Afghan frontier country, those historic free-booters who have plied their trade around Khyber Pass for centuries are on the warpath again. The current unrest in India and the prospects of loot have encouraged them to attack the city of Peshawar, the last British outpost in Northwestern India. Several times they have been beaten off by British troops and several times they have returned. Recently, British airplanes have followed them into their native hills and bombed them from the skies.

The semi-savage Pathans are undoubtedly the most ferocious and blood-thirsty fighters on the globe. They battle with a fanatical fury, bred of their Moslem belief that the warrior who dies by the sword is assured of a place in Allah's voluptuous paradise.

Their life and mode of living has been little changed since the legions of Alexander the Great poured through the Khyber into India 2500 years ago. Civilization has not touched these wild children of the hills except to provide them with guns instead of spears or swords, as more efficient means of committing murder.

In this age, most of the news that comes across the telegraph wires is drab with the world's modern, even-tempered life and its progress in that direction. But occasionally from some far-off corner of the globe there comes a flashing bit of color, full of the thrills of romance and buried deep in the background of the world's remote and interesting past.

Such is the news from the British outposts in the Khyber hill country today. It is equally as colorful and as interesting as a Kipling novel and it gives us an added thrill when we realize that we are reading fact instead of fiction.

Such are the stepping stones of progress and so they have been since history began.

THE WAY THINGS HAPPEN

From literature, we are told, we learn about life.

This, doubtless, is very true. But it occurs to one who has just finished reading a great many current detective stories that literature can give one some queer though interesting ideas.

Here, for instance, are some of the facts about life that stand out after digestion of the country's most popular mystery novels.

The library of a rich man's home is one of the most dangerous places in the world. This is especially true of English homes. For some reason, the overwhelming majority of all murders take place in libraries. Rich men without number have been knocked off while sitting placidly among their books. Usually they have been given no warning of any kind, but there are cases on record in which they not only knew that they were in danger, but actually locked all the doors and windows—without avail. The library, obviously, is a place to stay out of.

Butlers, it is comforting to learn, are practically never given to homicidal impulses. This writer can recall no case in which a butler murdered his employer, or anyone else. To be sure, butlers act very suspiciously at times, and not infrequently are up to shady practices; but they never stoop, or rise, to murder. The same applies with almost equal force to other servants. One recent book tells of a gardener who committed a singularly brutal murder, but this racial scene to have been a rare exception.

It is regrettable to discover that doctors do not seem as reliable. In all too many cases, judging by current literature, the trusted physician turns out to be a malignant rogue. Even where he does not, it often happens that he acts in a most peculiar manner when a crime has been committed.

The daughters of such rich men are slain in their libraries are nearly always quite innocent. This is comforting, since it quite often happens that these girls had strong financial or personal reasons for killing their fathers. Present-day detective fiction proves rather conclusively that the daughter is almost never guilty—although, it must be said, things often look a bit black for her.

The same applies, with not quite so much force, to the sons of murdered men. The sons, however, usually turn out to be sorry wasters, capable of sin if not of crime, and suspicion is often quite logically directed against them.

These are the outstanding discoveries made by an assiduous reader. There are interesting minor facts—poor men, for example, almost never get murdered, and the goffer a defective acts the more sure he is to be a mental giant—but there is no space here to go into them at any length. It is all very absorbing. How much one can learn about life from literature!

Weather Has Affected Feeding of Poultry

Good feeding of poultry during lean income years is fully as important as in years of good crops, and poultry prices, asserts C. M. Ferguson, extension specialist in poultry for the Ohio State University.

Shifting about of rations because of dry weather, and dry weather itself, has raised two problems with which poultrymen ordinarily do not meet, he says. One is a vitamin A deficiency in the ration and the second is the reduction in ground worm infestation.

Absence of green feed and the substitution of wheat for yellow corn in the poultry ration may bring about this vitamin deficiency, unless vitamin A is supplied in some other way, explains Ferguson. Wheat doesn't contain it and yellow corn does, its lack leads to nutritional rick, he says.

To make up for this deficiency in the diet Ferguson recommends the feeding of alfalfa and soybean hay, or alfalfa leaf meal. As much hay can be fed as the birds will consume, but if the leaf meal is used about 6 to 8 per cent of the ration is quantity enough, he declares.

Roundworms, on account of the hot, dry weather, are not as numerous as usual, although the weather had little or no effect on tapeworms, Ferguson says. Before treating for worms he recommends that a poultryman get an absolute diagnosis this year. Treatment for worms is discussed in Ferguson's latest bulletin, Poultry Parasites and their Control, which may be obtained from the office of agricultural publications at the University.

ACIDS IN STOMACH CAUSE INDIGESTION

Medical authorities state that nearly all cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed, and food is often causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

TEAMWORK IMPORTANT IN POULTRY RAISING STATES PROF. BODWELL

Did you ever try to pick, before the event of a fair, a winning team of horses in a pulling contest? If so, you may not have selected the winner. Why? Because you probably did not take into account the owner of the team. The training of the team is as important as the team itself and many times more so.

The same principle applies to culling the flock of hens. Have you fed them the feed necessary for egg production? Have you kept up their body weight? Examine the birds first and see if they are in good physical condition. If they are poor in flesh, feed them for about 10 days on a fattening mash mixed with milk. Then give them a feed that will produce eggs. Eggs are 16 per cent protein and contain most of the building stones, or amino acids. Therefore, they must have feed that contains all of these building stones in order to produce eggs without causing too great a strain upon their body.

Did you ever try to grow cucumbers upon soil that was poor in fertility? You found that the vines were small and a very poor crop resulted. But on this same soil, sufficiently fertilized, vines grew luxuriantly, were a nice, green color and a bountiful crop resulted.

Hens that are supplied the proper feed in sufficient quantities will respond similarly. They will keep up their body weight, resist disease better and produce eggs in greater number.

Laying birds should have at least one foot of hopper space to every five hens, if they are going to have a chance to eat all they want.

Of course, it is true that hens inherit a certain ability for production, but let's feed them properly, then cull out only those that have the natural low production after having given them a chance to perform.

SLAYER OF SHEEP ON FARMS IS HUNTED

Strong efforts are being made to find out who shot 12 sheep on the farms of Roy Smith and J. V. Arthur, Greenwich twp. farmers, on Sunday. Two sheep were killed on Arthur's farm and 10 sheep were killed and eight were wounded on the farm of Mr. Smith, who is a brother of Sheriff Harry D. Smith. No motive can be ascribed for the wanton slaughter of the defenseless animals but the authorities are inclined to think that the work is that of a person of defective mind. Most of the wounded sheep are expected to recover.

Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Colorado, North and South Dakota before riding North and South Dakota before civilization claimed them! Indians, Indians, Indians, and Indians! Imagine riding 14 hours straight in the saddle over rough ground—carrying 50 pounds a day to avoid the ever-alert eye of the Redman—finding your buddy with ten arrows and three bullets in his body—scalped—his heart on a stick in the ground near by. It happened in Fort Halle, in old Colorado, about twenty miles west of Denver.

Tubbs has shaken the hand of Brigham Young, the celebrated Mormon leader, the founder of Salt Lake City, as his regiment of the army was sent to the Mormon capital to arrest the officers of the settlement for supplying the Redmen with firearms. Young did not resist arrest, and after a few days in the guard house, regretted his mistake, and made no more trouble. The army man describes Young as tall and striking looking. At that time the Mormon was keeping 37 wives. As he would marry, a room would be added for each wife.

Many times has Tubbs worked for hours without water. The water supply for the soldiers was carried in barrels from the Little Big Horn, the Platte, the Laramie, the Yellowstone, and other rivers supplied with snow water from the mountains.

While "way out west" in the cavalry, Tubbs rode nine different horses, six being shot from under him. He remembers distinctly one gray mount that could jump a 3 foot bar, and a 24 foot ditch. A deserter from the army ran off with the horse, however, and Tubbs was given a stambling beast that made walking a pleasure.

But as the disease of homesickness will subdue all, Tubbs returned home. A little dog, as old as he, that had been out of the yard for two years recognized his step, and came to meet him. But "Buttons" was too old to enjoy life, and was finally sent to dogheaven with a kindly bullet. Buttons, with his little black eyes, and white hair, will always hold a spot in Tubbs's heart. How he could kill snakes—two jerks and their heads were off!

"Yes, if I were young again, I'd go in the army. I guess, I would if I was young enough." When the world war broke, Tubbs wrote to Columbus and announced that he was ready to go. Officials there did not disregard his reply but answered that if the call was necessary he would be notified, and his war experience made use of. And now, Frank Tubbs, who is turning into his 87th year, sits quietly at home, after an eventful life. He is not in the best of health, but is capably cared for by his faithful wife, Mrs. Mazie Tubbs. Mrs. Tubbs in her spare moments works on fancy quilts and linen pieces, the results being known far and near.

pure lake water each. One is aerated and one is not. Each of the other tanks also contains 200 gallons, but the water is mixed with sulphite liquor. In two of the tanks there is one part sulphite to 50 parts water in the two others, one to 100, and in the other two, one to 200.

"Dr. Cole explained that sulphite liquor has an affinity for oxygen. In streams a short distance below sulphite mills where the liquor pours into the river, fish frequently cannot live because there is no oxygen in the water. It is also believed that the sulphite liquor is poisonous, but there is no certainty of this, and the experimenters hope to prove definitely whether it is or not.

"The motor efforts so far in treatment of sulphite waste to control stream of pollution have consisted of attempts to reduce its oxygen requirements by ponding and aeration. This procedure, however, is regarded as a temporary expedient until methods are developed for utilization of valuable organic matter in the waste. The degree to which these organic matters must be removed to protect fish and other aquatic life adequately, it is believed by the investigators, will be determined definitely by the work in progress.

"Close watch is kept over the fish in the tanks. When the experiment started, Dr. Cole was present 60 hours. Daily tests on the oxygen content of the different tanks are run. The biochemical oxygen demand of the liquor is determined. The temperatures are recorded. The acidity is measured. The fish are examined regularly. Those that die are cut open and examined and records are kept of the time of death and condition.

"Already some data has been collected and Dr. Cole is confident that the results will be exceedingly valuable. As expected, the fish in the heavy sulphite liquor tanks, non-aerated, died very rapidly. Even the fish in the non-aerated tank of pure water, where oxygen was obtainable only from the surface, died soon after the experiment started. In the tank containing a solution of one to 50, even though it was aerated, the fish died.

"In the other aerated tanks that contain weaker solutions of sulphite liquor, the fish are still living. From the data that has been obtained and that to be obtained before Sept. 15,

Dr. Cole expects to separate the toxic effect of the liquor from its oxygen depletion effect.

"Following the experiments with the sulphite liquor, further studies will be made with sulphite waste liquor from which much of the organic constituents have been removed. With these wastes, called "tail liquors," it may be found that in harmful substances have been removed and that fish may survive in streams into which pour wastes so treated."—The Milwaukee Journal.

Perhaps the most dynamic words of the service during the World War were those—"Let's Go!" Slang words they were before the gigantic struggle of the world conflict, but on the Western Front these words have been glorified.
