

WALTER DICK IS TAKEN BY DEATH

Funeral Services Are Held Sunday Afternoon From Home of Brother

Near one o'clock Friday morning, Walter Dick, at the age of 45 years, died at the home of an aunt, Miss Lena Yacklin, in New Washington.

Physicians pronounced the death due to heart trouble. Mr. Dick left his Plymouth home in September and has since remained in New Washington to the time of his death.

Surviving is the one brother, Harry, through his business Mr. Dick had become well known to practically all of the townfolk, who numbered him among their friends, and deeply regret his death.

The body was removed for preparation to the Pontic Funeral Home and later taken to the home of his brother, Harry Dick, on West Broadway, where services were held Sunday afternoon at two o'clock.

A Real Christmas Tree

It was an odd but wonderful kind of tree. You'll never guess what kind it could be.

Each one as proud as proud could be, proud of its part in the life of the tree.

Each little branch had a life of its own. Apart from all the others shown.

That's the Christmas spirit will whirl in your mind.

Behold, what was that which then we could hear.

For this Christmas spirit will whirl in your mind.

Who couldn't you guess the name of that tree?

For this Christmas spirit will whirl in your mind.

Who couldn't you guess the name of that tree?

For this Christmas spirit will whirl in your mind.

WATER SYSTEM ABOUT FINISHED

Village to Get Approved Water After Nearly 20 Years Delay.

The development of Plymouth's water supply has become a reality—almost twenty years since the first order was issued by the state department of health, which was dated May 10, 1911, and was approved by the governor and attorney general on Nov. 18, 1912—today the village can boast of a source of water supply that is abundant and pure, and citizens will no longer need to travel to the old-fashioned pump to get a fresh drink.

The improvements of the town's water started back in 1911, and year after year, delay after delay, kept the town from having water suitable for household purposes. A few years ago officials favored a filtration plant, using the old stone quarry as a source of supply, but an injunction stopped these proceedings, and since that time the subject has been comparatively quiet in the village.

And so today, two eight-inch wells show an excellent flow of water, and tests prove that it is desirable for household consumption. And within a few weeks this bright sparkling, refreshing fluid will be flowing through the water mains into our homes.

Village officials were represented at the hearing of the Ohio state health council meeting a few weeks ago by A. J. Murphy of Columbus, an engineer of note, who has been retained by council for supervision of the water works improvement. An order for time extension on the original order was asked at this meeting, and it was granted on Dec. 12 at the request of Murphy.

Contributions for this display are solicited. Light refreshments will be served to all. A donation of ten cents is asked to defray expenses. The public is cordially invited.

After Christmas Meditation

By REV. J. W. MILLER

The Spirit of Christmas, which our traditions preserve, is one of Peace, Quietness and Joy. It was a silent night when our Saviour was born. The world in solemn stillness lay, to hear the angels sing their carol of peace and good-will.

If you stand in the tide of the pre-Christmas rush, you would scarcely catch the spirit of these Christmas carols in what takes place before your eyes. Your impulse would most likely be to cry out, "O hush your noise ye men of strife, and hear the angels sing."

If every heart keeps its Christmas within at least, to the Christian Christmas may be Christian. If the symbolism of the gifts still retains its meaning, we can at least attempt to teach the lesson which our parents, in the very largeness of their love are failing to teach their children, namely—that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

MUSIC COMPOSED BY MAURICE DAVIS

The following is a Christmas anthem, the music for which was written by Maurice Davis, of Shelby, son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Z. Davis. The words were written by G. W. Peters.

THE STAR AND THE KING

In the stillness of night, When the world was in dreams, Great beams of strong light From a wonder-star gleamed.

And the star guided wise men (and presents they bring) Over a rocky mountain, in search of a King.

And the waters were still Under beams of starlight, Silence reigned on the hill Of old Zion that night.

And a voice out of heaven, amid strange star-burns, Cried, "Fear not, I bring you most wonderful news!"

Then the shepherds in fear, Turned to see the strange sight, And the face of the Star Who had broken their night.

When a chorus of angels out of heaven's bright morning sang, "Hosanna, Hallelujah, the Saviour is born!"

Then in glory to God, The hosannas still ring; Hallelujahs are loud For the story they bring.

To all nations of people their message will sing, And we will praise forever, Lord, Saviour and King.

—G. W. Peters.

wanted the money—needed it. For we had with us that sum of money I made the cats. It didn't want to go back to that bad time again. I didn't know how wonderful you are. You're my good friend. I'll never forget it again. Oh, Ernestine, I'll do big things for you—I will.

A clock somewhere boomed two, and Ernestine started in his arms. She had remembered Loring—at last. She withdrew herself from her husband's grasp and made a gesture of helplessness.

"But here's this business of Loring," she said.

"What is it about Loring?" he asked, watching her.

So with the enchantment, the throbs of love still on her, she told him about Loring—about all that Pastano had said to her that morning.

"But of course," he said at once, "you must let me take the money for you—at once. Give me the slip of paper."

She gave it to him with a reluctant sigh, and he gave a whistle as he looked at it.

"How could you have refused Pastano?" he asked. "Think what it would mean to your family—to your mother. And Lillian—with Loring dragged through the mud!"

"But Will! The money's yours—it's what we've just been talking about. It's your chance."

"I don't need twenty thousand dollars," he said quickly, and then gave a laugh of pure happiness. "Why, Ernestine," he said, "if you understand—if you know what it's all about—if you can live that economically and if you're behind me, I'll take a chance on it. Give the money for Loring—we can manage it. But I'll add more seriously, 'the understand—log—the way I feel now—is worth more than the money. Let Loring have the money, we're rich. When we were young and poor we did as we liked. But after we got a little money we weren't free agents any more. The big income restricted us more than the little one. Look how Loring was bound by money! Let's let it go. After all, only beggars can choose!"

"If you'll quit the paper and go ahead with this work, if you still stick to your own dreams, I'll gamble with you," she said.

"It's done," he answered. He reached for his coat and sat and looked at his watch at the same moment.

"We'll have to go right back to the bank. Thank God, you've got the money and don't hesitate it. Nothing can stop us now."

And before they went out into the dark and narrow hall, they kissed again, hand in hand, simply, like child from pleading a secret.

Ernestine saw Ruby Pastano near the bank entrance and, though he bowed formally and did not speak, he gave her a flashing, red and gleaming like the flash of a mirror held in the sun. She knew that he understood, from the happy countenance and from Will at her side, that they were looking after Loring.

CHAPTER XV

Some Day

But the day was not over for Ernestine. She left Will at the bank. His coat pocket was stuffed with the packet of bills the teller had given them, and her bank balances was reduced to three dollars. But that didn't matter. Not a bit. She was a million times richer than she had been the day before. The bankbook figures would fatten again. She wished she had her car, but, lacking it, she went across to Sheridan road, took a bus north, rode almost to Devon, left the bus and went to Lillian.

Nobody answered the bell, but the door was unlocked, so Ernestine walked in. The house was silent, but she was instantly aware of the fact that some one was in it. She called, but no one answered. She went through into the kitchen. The maid's bedroom was out the kitchen and the door stood open. Ernestine went in there and saw that the room wore an unoccupied look. She opened the closet door. The hooks were empty. The maid had left, or had been dismissed.

She was still under the domination of her deep self, and, as she had been governed in Will's office an hour or so earlier by forces she did not understand, so now she went quickly up the stairs, through the attic, and into the big front bedroom where Lillian and Loring slept. The cover showed the impress of a body, the pillow had been disturbed from under the spread. She looked swiftly about and was not at all surprised to see Loring standing against the wall, his hand on the bed behind his back.

His coat collar was turned up across the back, his hair was in disorder, he was unshaved, and across one cheek was a deep imprint where his sleeve, or his pillow, had creased his flesh.

Ernestine went to him and held out her hand.

"Give it to me," she said sternly, as she might have addressed Peter.

Loring stared at her coldly for a moment, his hazel eyes taking on a belated vitality. Then, silently, but with a shrug and a grimace, he drew from behind him a small nickel-plated revolver and put it in her hand. Ernestine crossed the room, opened the window and flung it far away into the water of the lake that breathed against the window.

She turned back to Loring, closed the window and started her hands.

"That's that," she said with a gleam in her eyes. "What did you think that was going to do for you?"

He dragged himself away from the wall and sank down into a chair-lounger. With a king of groan Loring hid his face in his hands and sat there like a broken man.

"I didn't know till this afternoon," he said. "But the grand jury—"

"That's all right, Loring," said Ernestine. "That's fixed."

"Fixed?" he said hoarsely, and looked up at her with a question a little wild. "You don't understand. They've got me seven ways."

"Not now," she said, thinking how strange it was that he could not know about Pastano, and about the twenty thousand dollars.

"Will fixed it," she said gently. "You know, he has friends who told him. Will fixed it for you, Loring. He could—there are men downtown who would do anything for Will. He knows the ropes."

"I'm a Failure," He Muttered. "A Complete Failure."

Loring's head fell forward again. "I'm a failure," he muttered. "A complete failure—and now Will pulls me out of the rubbish heap. I've been here in the house all afternoon, trying to screw myself up to do one decent thing—to get myself out of the way—before all this falls on the rest of you, and I couldn't even do this."

"Of course you couldn't. You're too perfectly healthy. You've been a fool perhaps—like the rest of us, but you aren't crazy, and only insane people are capable of self-destruction. Look, Loring, you can start again. Why, men sometimes have to start again when they're old. Lots of men fall once—or twice—and then succeed. You can start back and rebuild your father's old business. What if you have to let the house and the car go? It's a small price for a new start. Pastano will let you alone, as long as you stay off of his preserves. Lillian's got her money. Will and I are going to start now."

He looked up at her—eager to be comforted as a child is eager to be comforted—eager to believe her, coming back, slowly and painfully, from the dark places of fright and madness.

"But Lillian!" he said, protesting, arguing, as mortal man always argues, on the wrong side—"Lillian's going to have a baby—that was what she came on all that old business—I'd been sick of it, anyhow, and when I knew I might have a son—I had to get clean. I told her to go to New York, last week, but she wouldn't. She's stuck to me, Ernestine. I never believed she would. I thought she was a fair-weather wife. I've always thought so. But she's been wonderful. She let her maid go, and she's been doing her own housework. She sold her car and brought me the money. She wrote to her father to let her have her trust fund outright. Now she's going out looking for a job. That's all right—but when I thought of jobs—and Lillian's baby coming in all that trouble, it seemed that the best thing I could do would be to get out. If I were gone, she'd go home, she'd marry, and perhaps no one would know. I'm all caved in about Lillian, about the way she's taken it."

"Why, Loring," said Ernestine, and laughed shakily. "Lillian adores you—always did. She loves you. And when you've just found out how much she and you conspire leaving her. What a way to thank it! There's not like a man!"

"They talked a little, Ernestine, and I was on the ground, then, I'm glad that you Lillian had made. Gradually he relaxed, came back to normalcy."

P. H. S. NOTES

weeks and don't forget your ice skates for you can go skating over there. All aboard, the captain says, here we go! Just then the boat began to move faster, and faster. The owner of the ship says it will take at least one week. What a surprise, we are here right in the dock of Amsterdam, the people come out to see what is happening. We've seen to what queer costumes they wear, baggy pants, wooden shoes and neat little caps. The wind is blowing rather hard and the wind mills are going rather fast. There are lots of canals which are used for transportation. They sure have a nice country to live in, lots of cows where you can drink lots of fresh milk if you like it. The Dutch children drink it; that's what makes you strong and healthy, so you can go skating and you can have lots of fun. The captain says we better be starting back but before we go I want to show you a beautiful tulip garden. So we said, alright for we will all be interested in them after we see the tulip gardens we are on our way. It took us longer coming back for we all wanted to see the ocean and surroundings. Finally we were in the dock and home again.

TO MY READERS

By Hulsh Davis

Dear Friends: This little poem that I publish today was written while I was confined to my hospital bed this summer. It is just a little writing of my true thoughts and my imagination that entertained me during my sickness. "The Rose" described, is one that was sent me and it tells just what I saw and made of it. Really, it was such a perfect image of, first, a child, second, a little old lady, that when friends would come in I would ask them to share its peculiarity with me and nearly everyone could also see the resemblance of a child and old lady. So you see I am not the only one that had an imagination quite unbelievable. I only hope that when you read these little verses that you will be able to picture "The Rose" in the Irish lace picture frame as it really came to me.

A ROSE

I've heard it said many a time That each little garden rose Is like a dainty little person Sweet and straight in pose.

CELERYVILLE

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Sharpless and son Harley and Mr. and Mrs. John Wiers enjoyed Christmas dinner with Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Brooks at Plymouth.

Mr. John Newmyer and son John, Denn, Marie and Anna Newmyer are visiting relatives in Kalamazoo, Mich.

But as many others I thought it nonsense No rose could have a face— No rose could be in a picture frame Of handsome Irish lace.

But today as I lie in my hospital bed One little yellow rose Peeps from its Irish lace picture frame Sweet and straight in pose.

One eye is closed, a smile on its lips And the sweetest little tamed-up nose. The petals curl about its face It looks not like a rose.

As the breezes blow through my open window It nods its head as if to say, "Yes, 'tis true, I'm just a rose, But please do not look away."

And then I see it at a different angle. It's turned to a little old lady. Her face is wrinkled, but she still smiles; She must be nearly eighty.

So real does it look I wonder if I'm dreaming Can it be true that you're just a rose With the sweetest little beaming face And the darning turned up nose?

Again it nods its little head As if to say to me, "Yes, 'tis true, I'm just a rose That's very plain to see."

Of course, the little picture frame Of handsome Irish lace, Is only imagination as is That sweet little face.

But now I know why poets write Of roses such as this, With little turned up noses And lips that were made to kiss.

It's just another of the many wonders That come to us today. Just another of the works of God That He has sent this way.

Have you watched the magic of the falling snow? How silent! How beautiful! Every flake is of an exquisite mathematical design, and no two alike. They suggest what? The restful repose of God, the immaculate white perfection of His work. We are taking a peep into the new year; what is before us we know not. If we follow His way, we shall not travel alone. He is not! He dwells in and beyond the pathless air, and guides not only the birds, but us. The wings of the morning are not strong enough to bear you away from His hovering presence. Be not in men, but in the wealth God has given you.

HIGH SCHOOL TAKES ALUMNI INTO CAMP WITH A BANG

By T. Webber Friday, 27.

Folks, I certainly am sorry for the dear old Alumni of Plymouth. Frankly they just aren't what they used to be. They have been asking for it all year, they razed and kidded and laughed at the playing of the high school for one solid year. But, oh, you should have seen them grovel all over the P. H. S. basketball floor last Friday, Dec. 27 from about nine thirty to ten thirty. They got theirs, in the form of 17 personal fouls called against them, that means that the high school had enough free throws presented to them to win the ball game, the high school only had 6 fouls called on them in the entire game.

At half time the score stood Alumni 9, P. H. S. 6 however the Jenkintown tore out for the last half chuck full of fight and determination, they barged ahead and the Alumni were powerless to stop the surging tide that swept irrefutably down the floor for basket after basket. Finally the Pillgrims oozed ahead and at the end had 19 to the 14 that the Alumni had been able to gather. We understand the Alumni had some excellent material, home for the holidays. Be that as it may the high school has a few good men who managed by dint of hard playing to smear the efforts of the Ashland flash, and June Heschach now going to Purdue another old time star. Of the high school little need be said, for this is their seventh straight victory and they gave every evidence of continuing their present winning form.

In closing—I want to ask any Alumni who reads this: Do they ever come back?

GIRLS' SPORTS

GIRLS LOSE CLOSE GAME

Polk High School girls defeated a victor from Plymouth 13 girls in the basketball fight played at Polk last Tuesday night, the final score being 19-20. The score at the half was 8-6 in Polk's favor. In the last half with 2 minutes to play Polk was leading 20-17. Pugh was fouled while making a field goal and the basket counted, but she failed to put in either of the free throws which would have tied the score.

Pugh and Moore shared the honors for high score, both tallying 10 points. The Polk center and one of the forwards each totalled 4 points for the victors.

ALUMNI OUTCLASSED BY REGULARS

Despite the old-time flashy playing of Sheeley and Becker, the P. H. S. girls came out at the long end of the 18 to 16 score.

The "Grads" were back at their old game but the High School girls surprised the biggest aggregation of regulars of the year by ending two points to the good.

At the half the ex-high team was leading 9 to 7, but the regulars totalled 5 field goals and one foul shot to the Alumnae 3 field goals and one free throw during the last half.

Pugh was again high scorer for the High School girls with 11 points, Becker being high scorer for the Alumnae with the total of 10 points.

HONEY ANT

A true ant of the family Formicidae and chiefly of the sub-family Camponotinae. The honey ant is so called from certain of the wingless individuals becoming so many honey pots their abdomens distended with honey fed to them by the normal workers including both dwarfs and majors. It occurs from central Colorado to New Mexico and as far south as the City of Mexico. It erects mounds six or seven inches across and two or three inches in height, of the shape of a flattened cone. In the interior is the honey chamber, or a rough dome-shaped vault or figure, the honey beavers (000 in a large colony) clinging by their feet to the roof. Their yellow bodies are stretched along the ceiling, their swollen, round, amber colored abdomens of the size of currants hanging down.

THE SPONGE AND WHAT IT IS

The common sponge is a familiar object. Yet few people know really what a sponge is. Most people wrongly believe that it is a sort of sea weed. Nor is this strange, perhaps, that people do not know its true nature, for it was formerly one of the mistakes of science.

Animals are divided into two classes—those made of single cells and those made of two or more cells. Sponges are the lowest form of the second class. They consist of many cells and the dry material which we use to wash cars, etc., with is the horny skeleton of the cells which holds them together and gives them shape. The spongy skeleton has tiny cells staggered all over its surface in such a way that it forms a porous mass. The openings and tiny pores on the outside lead into a network of tubes large and small. The cells are spread the pores and mesh, and during the process, large little sea-like animals which all have openings at the ends of water flows in at the and set again in the morning. In the way food and energy in the body are made, to circulate to all cells.

There are male and female sponges, and the female sponges produce eggs that develop into single cells. At first they go swimming through the water but afterward they take root and form an elaborate compound structure as we know it.

I have attempted to describe. There are sponges of all shapes, sizes and colors. Some are the size of a pinhead, some are as tall as a tree; some are tree-like, some are cuplike; some are built on a horny framework; some are built of lime; some are red, yellow, etc.

The Greeks and the sponge are closely related because they were the first to make a practical use of the sponge.

CITY NOISES HAVE EFFECT ON STRANGERS

According to experiments conducted by a neurologist in New York City, visitors in a large city burn up energy more rapidly than the average resident. This is attributed to the effect of the noise on the nervous system. The residents of the city, it was found were somewhat immune to these noises, because of their adaptation. The stranger reacts to the unusual clamor which either increases or decreases the respiration and sometimes causes heart changes.

for ANY BABY

WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. We call it Castoria. There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm to the system. Baby has a horrid spell, is fidgety, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria and you're done. Sometimes a touch of colic. Sometimes constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that would give you a checked without delay. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. It will follow very promptly. If it doesn't, you should call a physician.

time, happiness and peace for those who have and this should include everyone. Christmas is not a time for vulgar display, and to see which one can spend the most money. In buying presents observe three principal facts: the length of your purse, the character of your friend, and a rule of good taste. Avoid selfishness at Christmas if at so other time. Rather no gift at all than a grudging one. Have you not heard in your life-time people say, "Well, I will wait to see if Mrs. or Mr. So-and-so gives me a present; then I will return one." This is not the attitude of Christmas giving. Let your little gift represent yourself and your affection. Do not think so selfish that you must give to some one because some one gave to you. Let your gift be an expression of kindly remembrance.

There are many thousands of people today who do not know the art of giving. So let's hunt up some one who needs and who is without pleasure of this world.
