

RESURFACING OF TWO ROADS IS BEING COMPLETED THIS WEEK

ESTIMATED COST OF JOBS IS ESTIMATED AT $10,000; BOTH COUNTIES PARTICIPATING.

One of the most extensive and beneficial highway improvements made in this section for many years was started last week when the Huron county highway department began work on the county line road. The improvement program, which has been set up between the Huron and Richland county highway departments, also calls for a surface treatment of the west road.

Huron County Engineer Wilbur Terry stated Wednesday morning that the work was being done between Huron and Richland counties on a 50-mile stretch. The program was worked out between Terry and Howard Sword, Richland county highway engineer. However, the entire cost of the county line project is being borne by Huron county.

Crawford county lines meet, which will be to the first bridge east of New Pittsburgh, a distance of two and one-half miles. The estimated cost of this project is $7,300.

Workers moved into Plymouth last Wednesday and immediately started hauling bar and stone. For both jobs, it is said that thirty cars of crushed stone and five cars of bituminous material will be required. A loader is placed on the side of the B. & O. tracks and with this equipment it takes only a few minutes to load a truck. A number of trucks and tank cars are being used for the hauling of stone and gravel.

There is every reason to believe that the entire community appreciates the effort of both county highway departments in getting these two important stretches of road in shape for winter travel. With the resurfacing of the roads, they become permanent and will require very little upkeep. It is an improvement which will add much to the community, and one that is lasting.

While the equipment and material are available, village officials have made arrangements to have Bell Street resurfaced also. This is a street that bears heavy traffic to the clover plant and can well stand the improvement.

ASK COOPERATION OF ALL CIVILIANS

Revealing that "curiosity calls" had caused a break-down of communications in a number of cities recently, State Defense Director Ralph H. Stone today urged Ohioans to refrain from using the telephone in the event of an emergency in their communities.

Specifically classifying test blackouts, daylight air raid drills, airplane accidents and major fires as emergencies, Stone said that telephone offices and the street light and power companies and fire departments in many Ohio cities and towns had been flooded with calls from persons wishing merely to check on real or reported disasters.

As a result, he said, telephone lines were "jammed" and where the emergency was real, defense corps officials were "held up" and delayed in dispatching trained volunteers to the scene of action. In this connection, he pointed out that civilian defense depends on the telephone for the transmission of public air raid warnings and that if an enemy attack actually developed and the lines were "logged" with "curiosity calls", lives and property would be endangered.

New Licenses Required

The 1942 hunting licenses expired August 31. The new licenses were shipped by the Ohio Division of Conservation and Natural Resources to all dealers in plenty of time to supply those who did not wish to have the dead line without having supplied themselves with the new license.

The recent reports from Washington that ammunition is to be released has caused many Ohio sportsmen to prepare for the fall hunting season, license dealers reporting to Conservation Commission, Sen. Dan Waters.

RITE HELD FOR MRS. J. E. HODGES

WELL-KNOWN RESIDEN SUC-CUMDS TO HEARTY AT-TACK THURSDAY

Funeral services for Mrs. Effie Clara Hodges, wife of Joe Hodges, were held Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock at the Lutheran church with Rev. A. L. Baker, pastor of the Methodist church of Willard, officiating. Interment was made in Greenlawn cemetery and arrangements were under the direction of Miller-McQuate.

Mrs. Hodges died Thursday evening, Aug. 26, after a heart attack. She had been removed a little more than three weeks prior to her death, to the Willard hospital for treatment, and her condition was so improved until she was brought home. However, after her return home she suffered another attack from which she failed to rally.

The deceased was the oldest daughter of the late William Franklin and Sarah Katherine Darling, and was born in Richland county, Ohio, Nov. 15, 1876. At the age of one year the family moved to a farm north of Shiloh in Huron county.

On June 30, 1897 she was united in marriage to Joseph E. Hodges and to this union were born three children: Aiden P. of Well-lake, O., Alice Katherine Hodges, who died in 1932, and Mrs. Martha F. Krapp of Cleveland.

Mrs. Hodges, with the exception of fourteen years which she lived in Cleveland, had made this community her home. Moving to Plymouth with her husband seven years ago from Cleveland, she was welcomed to Plymouth, and during these years made many warm friends and acquaintances. She was a member of Trevor Chapter, O. E. S., Cleveland, and the Maccabees.

Surviving are her husband, one son, Aiden of Westlake; a daughter, Mrs. Mary F. Krapp, Cleveland, and a grandson, Allan John Hodges. The deceased also leaves two sisters, Miss Pearl Darling of Shiloh, Mrs. Mary Williams of Shaker Heights, O., and many other relatives.

The applicant need only to have operated a motor vehicle for a year. Applications must be made within six months after discharge from service.

State law provides that no person may obtain a driver license if there is pending against that person an unsatisfied judgment in a court of record, if that judgment was for wrongful death, personal injury to others, or damage to property caused by actions of the operator of the motor vehicle, unless the operator shall furnish proof of ability to satisfy the judgment.

Around the Square

(By Phineas Whitteased)

FRANK STOUT and the wife are now living in Willard... 110 E. Emerald street. The Stouts have been residing in Columbus, but Emil Landefeld of Willard out-talked Frank and now Mr. Stout is assisting Emil at the bowling alley and garage in Willard. Mr. Stout says it does feel mighty good to be back in his old stomping ground, and we're happy, too, that he's back with us.

JUDGING FROM a little news item this week concerning the local Garden Club, it is hinted that this organization might put on a fall flower show. I think an exhibition of this kind will be welcome to the community, and it gives the chance to take one long sweet look at the flowers before we go into a long dismal winter.

FROM THE NUMBER of petitions being circulated around the square the old political pot should be boiling over by the time the registration or filing date rolls around. Fackler told me last week that every man and woman in Plymouth should be made to serve at least one term in public office. Hen is speaking from experience.

I THINK EVERY INDIVIDUAL in Plymouth is trying to do his or her part in helping to win the war. However, few people know what John F. Root is doing to beat the nation. Early this spring when predictions were made the effect that there would be food shortage in some respect, especially the meats, Mr. Root decided he could help out by going to the stock country business. So he made an investment of brooder houses, feeders, pens, etc., and then began his work. Morning noon and night John F. has been tied down with his chickens.

WHEN THE SAESON is over Mr. Root will have put on the market an estimated five thousand chickens for consumption. He didn't have to do this and under the circumstance, with his initial investment, he won't make a dime. But he has the satisfaction in knowing that he has contributed many hours of hard work and that he has performed a service for his fellow citizens and his country. It's teamwork like this by thousands of Americans, who this summer, have put in extra time and money, and who will have helped feed the nation and win the war.

I'VE BEEN WATCHING the Hon. and Roll of services, and is located on the east side of the Peoples National Bank building. It bears the names of some 180 men who have gone out into this community into the various branches of service. It represents Plymouth in all parts of the world... men who creep and crawl through underbrush... travel the hot sands of the desert... climb mountainous slopes to fight... in order that we may once more enjoy peace and freedom.

YES, I'VE A LOT of reverence for that honor roll. Each morning when I dip my towel into hot water for my shave... a full meal... the comforts of home... I realize that boys from Plymouth and thousands of other communities are doing a fighting job, it makes me take a good step in and do more. I know we're signed up for 10 per cent in bonds, and we're doing all we possibly can, but we've got to do more... it is in Plymouth as it is in every other town in the nation. The goal of $150,000 in the forthcoming War Bond Drive. Think it over seriously. Isn't it much easier to buy Bonds than to go through the things our boys in service are experiencing? Be fair to them, and we're certain you'll have a clear conscience.

AND WHILE WE'RE SPEAKING of a clear conscience, I wonder what Bill Ross thinks of the point system and the rationing board? Bill is home for 30 days, and a natural man as a result he can't exist. But he has to get permission to buy the necessary food. So Bill makes application to the

A LETTER

Everytime I pass that "honor roll" on Main street, I stop and just wonder what some of these boys and girls too must think of their hometown, when they DON'T see their names there as they should be. ## CHAPTER VII

Jane, a fashion artist, shares an apartment in Toledo with Stella, a free lance journalist. Jane joins the W.A.P. There before she goes to work she walks through dim streets and collides with the attendant of the R.A.P. Shopping list in her hand, she finds she has discovered that the Hesterton, Timothy and Seaver - policeman - is Stella's divorced husband. Jane hears her name called as she goes to the office and that they are searching for him. She pedals to the home of Mrs. Stanton, where she meets her mother for the first time. Mrs. Stanton accuses Jane of sending tips to his death.

Her voice cold with disgust and anger, the contempt she felt for the other woman showing clearly in her eyes, she said, "Tips would never forgive you if he knew. Don't you realize it's his job to go out and count like this, that he's got to go, and what's more he wants to! Can you believe it a moment that he'd willingly splotter behind a woman's petticoat?"

"Iris' sob ceased. She glared at Jane. "Oh, don't be so damnably British! I... Tips means every-thing. It's the only thing that happens to him." Her voice rose hysterically. "Someone across my path, like you, Jane, is what that light 'What's going on there?'" Jane pushed her into the sitting room and closed the door.

"You'd better try to pull yourself together," she said curly. "All right, say I hope there aren't many more like you in England, so try to hold men back. It will be a poor lookout for the country if you're not here." Jane didn't take up that challenge. Instead she looked at the clock on the wall. Her hand stopped still. It was close to quarter to ten. Tips should have got back by now. It was almost half past. Without another word she dashed from the house, found her bicycle in the shed, and started off abruptly.

Without another word she dashed from the house, found her bicycle in the shed, and started off abruptly. She wanted and went in trepidation to report for duty.

She was the next morning, Jane was being reprimanded by an officer in charge for being late. "I had the most uncomfortable start of an hour of her life, but when it was over she was comforted by the feeling that bygone words of her mother's would be held against her. Her story that she'd gone to see friends, lost her way, the bicycle and had trouble with her bicycle, had apparently been believed, to her great relief.

"How many were there? Jimmie Steel-Sanders? I bet he was sick he wasn't able to go."

She turned toward them across the smooth green turf of the 'lying fields. Sparks had told her she'd be needed that night but he'd got back just after the squadron had taken off. He'd been to the kitchen and had overheard two officers talking about him, saying: "Poor old Tips! You should have said that about going along to the cook house. Probably by now they could get some breakfast." "I say, Lambert, together last evening, you and I."

Tips was passing them as she came. If he saw Jane he gave no sign of recognition. His face as hard and set.

"Where's Lambert?" Jane hesitated. She wished sparks hadn't asked her this question because she didn't want to answer it. She said, "I was and I wasn't. Sparks. Oh, I know that and I don't want to go on about it. You mind terribly if we leave it at that?" It's a long and rather involved story.

Sparks squeezed her arm. "Don't be silly. You don't have to tell me anything. You and I were coming along behind them. There was little Lambert. They were all three from below on duty."

Jane said she'd put the kettle on and make tea. It was too early to go to the cook house and get anything yet a while. "Anyone else like some?"

"I'm going to a chorus of acceptance."

"I'm going to lie down," said Hunter.

"Do. I'll take you a cup."

Hunter seemed to have grown up overnight. Jane had never seen him to her. Even though she might not be deeply in love with Jimmie Steel-Sanders, she had never really sounded as if she were last evening - she was clearly tortured today. Sparks went to her a few minutes later she found her on her knees before the open window. The face she turned to Jane was weak with misery. "I wish she hadn't told me he'd got a promotion," she sobbed. "I wish he doesn't come back."

Her face crumpled up and tears fell down her cheeks.

"He will, Hunter. Here, drink this tea! It'll do you good."

Ryman, the girl who shared the room with Hunter another of the younger ones, came quietly in and Jane left them together.

"You're waiting until they could count the number," said Hunter.

"I'll wait, Hunter. Here, drink this tea! It'll do you good."

"either. It's as clear as daylight what happened. You found him and warned him, didn't you? And he of course just stayed quietly away until the squadron had taken off, in order to save his own skin. There's a hero for you!"

"Hunter! Jane's face was white and she was trembling all over. "Hunter, how dare you suggest that!"

"Jane turned and left the room. She found Sparks hanging over the banisters. It was quite clear she had heard all that had been said and she was trembling all over. "Let's go for a walk," said Sparks. "Come on, Lambert, I've got a real urge to get away from the station for a little while."

Jane went slowly upstairs and put on her hat and coat.

"Don't forget your gloves," said Sparks. "There's a nip in the air today."

"Her voice was now gentle and sympathetic. "For heaven's sake, Lambert, don't look so scratched. Let's go on going to take the slightest notice of what Hunter says, and if I were you I should try to forget it."

Jane tried. She managed to put it from her mind for several days. Then one afternoon she went into the kitchen at the home of Hunter and Ryman having... She was in the room before they noticed her. Hunter's mouth lowered her voice a little as she said bitterly, "What is the other night, Hunter? Jimmie Steel-Sanders is a coward and Lambert is as bad. If she hadn't warned him and if he hadn't stayed away from the station until the others had started, Jimmie would be alive today."

Jane shut the kitchen door and stood leaning with her back against the door. She had heard all the saying things like that, Hunter, otherwise you'll be getting into trouble. Hunter swung round. Her eyes glared. "I hope he will. I'd say told her my story. I'm no sooner told a man who can behave as he behaved."

Jane looked at Ryman. "D'you mind, Ryman? I just want to speak to Hunter alone."

"Hunter, you must know it's impossible. He was just so sick he didn't get there in time. Everyone on the station knows that."

"Hunter said fiercely, 'You're bound to deny it, of course, just as you'll deny that you prevented him from going. Why, I'm no sooner told you what was in the wind than you sneaked out, pretending you had no idea of what was going on. I did make a telephone call, said Jane."

Jane hesitated. Should she tell Hunter the truth? In a flash she told her mind. "I'm no sooner told you what was in the wind than you sneaked out, pretending you had no idea of what was going on. I did make a telephone call, said Jane."

BILLION-DOLLAR YARDSTICK

War production officials are disturbed over the fact that they were able to spend only $250,000,000 a day for war purposes during July as against an expenditure of almost $300,000,000 a day during June.

This fact disturbs them because it indicates a decrease of 15 per cent in production when the aim of the War Production board is to show a production increase every month.

Most of us have learned to accept the dollar expenditures as a yardstick of production, but it is perhaps a dangerous method. For, under the dollar yardstick, if the costs of producing planes are increased it hampers the dollar expenditure record to rise and if production costs are lowered it makes the record look bad.

For rough figuring we suppose the daily expenditures do give us an overall picture of how production is going, but taxpayers would probably be a lot happier about it if the government could, some month, come along with a report of increased production but decreased expenditures.

Somehow we don't like the idea of visualizing production entirely in terms of dollars. It seems rather unhealthy for those of us on the sidelines to begin cheering when the government has managed to break a new record in the speed with which it is able to get rid of another billion dollars.

7,000 LIVES SAVED

For those who like to find silver linings, considerable satisfaction can be found in the restrictions on pleasure driving from the fact that the number of deaths from automobile accidents declined by 37 per cent during the first half of 1943.

Records of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company show that in the first six months of 1943 the mortality rate from automobile accidents was 11.6 per 100,000 as against a rate of 18.4 for the first six months of 1942. This means approximately 12,000 people were killed by automobiles in the first six months of 1943 as against approximately 19,000 during the same period in 1942. Thus the restrictions on driving and the 35-mile-an-hour wartime speed limit can be credited with saving over 1,000 lives per month.

Safety officials are studying this record with keen interest. They realize that after the war there will be more cars and more speed than ever before—but they hope to have some lessons in wartime restrictions which will aid in saving lives when motoring returns to normal.

They know the solution cannot rest on limiting the use of automobiles. But unless safety measures are worked out now which will apply to normal times, it is feared that, in the post-war era, the automobile will be more destructive to human life than it was itself.

Hello Tom:
How is everything around Plymouth?

By the way Tommy, if you ever want any exercise just come out here and we will take a little stroll up in the mountains where we were this week. It is the first time that I ever had cold feet in August. But we all very near froze.

I did not think that it got so cold up there, it was only 3,000 feet up and there is everything up there.

Well Tom, I can't think of any thing else right now so I will stop.

ASSIGNED

PORT BENNING, Ga.—(Spl.) Charles William Rhine of the Plymouth, Ohio, was commissioned a second lieutenant in the army of the United States today upon successful completion of the officer-candidate course at The Infantry school at Fort Benning. Lt. Rhine is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Rhine of 10 Park Ave., Plymouth.

The new lieutenant enlisted and was inducted into the army on March 7, 1941 and served with the 160th Infantry before going to Officer Candidate school three months ago. He held the rank of corporal before being commissioned.

The new officer is a graduate of Plymouth high school in Plymouth. At the infantry school, world's largest institution of its kind, the local officer took a three months' course to fit him for his new responsibilities. The course covers the technique of handling all the varied modern infantry weapons and the tactics of leading small infantry units in combat. It also includes study of many varied subjects which future officers must know along the lines of administration, military law, etc.

The men who attend the Officer Candidate schools are the best privates, corporals and sergeants from the entire army, selected by their superiors for outstanding intelligence and qualities of leadership. During the course even the mildly incapable are weeded out, so that the men who graduate with commissions are America's finest soldiers, fully qualified to be the leaders in our new army.

GRADUATE

PORT KNOX, Ky.—(Spl.)—Another class of skilled tank mechanics, trained to keep the General Sherman's, General Grants, and their little brothers, the light tanks, roaring into combat, were graduated today from the Armed School Tank Department. Graduates, announced from the offices of Maj. Gen. Alvin C. Gillem, jr., chief of the armored command, include: Cpl. Arnold H. Munn of 12 W. High street, Plymouth, Ohio.

During their training in the tank department the soldier students worked in the schools and went to field crews and under the conditions they are likely to encounter in the field. They studied the mechanisms of the various tanks, from track to turret, and then down to learn how to keep them moving in combat.

The Armored school, one of the largest technical institutions in the world, is commanded by Brig. Gen. Joseph A. Holt, while receiving many times more students each year than the largest civilian universities or colleges.

ASKS PENNIES

BE RELEASED

CLEVELAND—The Federal Reserve Bank issued another appeal today for persons hoarding pennies to smash their piggy banks and put the coppers back into circulation to relieve a tight money shortage which may hamper trade.

President Matthew J. Fleming said the fourth district reserve bank has been distributing 2,500,000 pennies a week, while receiving only 200,000 a week from member banks.

"It is a mystery where they all go," he said. "The sales tax, cigarette vending machines, seasonal demands at amusement parks and the amount of increase in pocket money require millions of pennies."

TICKETS ON SALE FOR FALL EXHIBIT

Tickets are now on sale at the M. Rogers Show Store at Richmond county's first Victory Harvest Show, scheduled for Sept. 11-12 at the Mansfield Armory. Individual tickets are 25c or five for $1.00.

A colorful display of the country's civilian defense activities will be presented with booths, tables and special arrangements on exhibition.

Printed material and entry blanks are obtainable at the show store. Entry blanks are also available at the Advertiser Office. The local guard club had anticipated using a booth but because of Sept. 9 was the closing date for entries and inability to get to Mansfield on account of the gas shortage, they gave up the idea and hope to sponsor a local flower show.

CLOSER OL' MAN DEATH IS THE LESS WE FEAR HIM

How we spend our lives playing dangerous games, reading about murders, watching daredevil stunts and excitement in an effort to still the voice telling us that the grim reaper will catch up with us some day, yet forget about him under fire if we're busy and angry enough, is described in this Sunday's (Sept. 2) issue of The Detroit Sunday Times. ## FARMER CALLED ON WHEAT DEAL

NORWALK—A widespread interest is shown in the statement that a Huron county farmer, who bought 150 bushels of feed wheat at a local elevator at the government's special price of $1.15 a bushel, resold the grain at a Monroeville elevator at a profit of 50 cents a bushel. It is given out that the farmer has been required to return the wheat from the Monroeville elevator and to pay that concern a 10 cent a bushel handling charge. It is stated that inasmuch as the government feed wheat is prime hard spring grain, it is easily identified, as practically all if not all of the wheat raised in Huron county is soft red winter wheat. An agricultural department ruling is said to provide a stiff fine for such a transaction.

RELEASE FUNDS

Release of $5,332,914 of automobile license tag revenue to the cities, counties and townships of Ohio was announced today by Highway Director H. G. Sours. Plymouth's share of the Huron county distribution was $137,000. With this distribution the total allocated so far this year is $14,266,816 for the building and the maintenance of roads in the subdivisions. The distribution for Huron county follows: Monroeville $325; Bellevue $908; Greenwich $387; New London $612; N. Fairfield $368; Norwalk $6,675; Wakeman $186; Willard $962; county 47 per cent, $27,201. Total of distribution $41,670.

Citizens of Plymouth will note the figures for Greenwich, New London and North Fairfield—see the difference? Again, being in two counties has its drawback for when state tax money is handed out to officials of TWO counties the attitude is taken that "let the other county satisfy the taxpayers in Plymouth."

Now, New London is not twice the population of Plymouth, and the tax valuation of New London isn't three times as big—but as long as the state code says "that funds shall be distributed to the various corporations by the budget commission as they see fit" then you can bet that the boys who "holer the loudest get the most" will be looked after.

FALL WEBWORMS ARE ABUNDANT

The unsightly webs on cherry, apple, elm, walnut and other trees which are unusually abundant this year are those of the fall webworm. Although it is rare for trees to be killed by this insect, the webs are unsightly and the general vitality of the tree is weakened when a considerable portion of the leaves is destroyed.

It is stated by J. S. Houser, Entomologist of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment station, that if a few webs only are present these may be clipped and burned. Burning the webs with a torch without first removing them from the trees is likely to cause too much damage to nearby foliage. When the webs are abundant the tree should be sprayed with lead arsenate used at the rate of 2 pounds to 50 gallons of water.

What are we fighting for

The Four Freedoms

FREEDOM FROM WANT

"Freedom from Want" is more than just an expression by a great humanitarian. It is the release of mankind from the hopeless struggle of scratching the bare earth for subsistence. Too long have there been too many human beings doomed to hunger, privation and mere creature existence in a world supposedly civilized and at peace. These people, of all colors and nationalities and faiths, must have the foods and the goods of the world made accessible to them if the dignity of man is ever to reach its full stature.

No nation on earth enjoys the bounty with which our country has been endowed. We have everything for a comfortable and full life. Our riches of the earth and the products they yield have offered incentive and reward to our people. They have enabled us to make America a land of homes and to establish the highest standard of living ever known.

It has always been thoroughly American to consider that the resources of our land belong to all of the people and that all should benefit from whatever should be derived from them. This is the democratic principle behind the belief of the big majority of Americans that our country must offer a fair opportunity to work and sufficient sustenance for all.

The wealth of our nation and the resourcefulness of our people are ample to provide the necessities of life for those who are in need. Our country is the most productive one there is in a world where all countries have become interdependent and where international commerce is ever more necessary, especially if further strides in America and greater world progress are to be realized. The peoples of all nations must therefore have access to the ample resources of the world and be free to enjoy them.

When nations can be freed from economic want they can flourish as we have, and then individual wants for the basic necessities of life can and will disappear from the world. This freedom will lift men all over the world still higher above the animal kingdom and establish man's full dignity everywhere. America points the way and will win the triumph to preserve it.

SUCCESSFUL PARENTHOOD

By MRS. CATHERINE CONRAD EDWARDS
Associate Editor, Parents' Magazine

SELECTING CHILDREN'S CLOTHING

There is a letter which I am sure many of you have felt tempted at times to write. The writer signs herself "Neighbor" and she says: "Won't you say something about the importance of a child's clothes to his peace of mind? I see the youngsters going by my house on their way to school and it honestly seems to me as if their behavior is dictated by their clothes! Of course, I really don't mean that—but I have been able to divide them into two or three classes. First, there are the over-dressed ones who lord it all over the others and are so conscious of themselves and their finery that I wonder if they ever have a really free, childish impulse to have a good time. Then there are the sloppily dressed ones—clothes too big or too tight, buttons off, shoe laces knotted—they either look miserable or try to hide their discomfort by being noisy and hard-boiled. And then, most pitiful of all, are the ones who have to wear freakish clothes to express their parents' personalities—something "arty" perhaps. These youngsters simply crawl into themselves and stay out of the way of the other boys and girls and their lives."

The child who is dressed conspicuously or inappropriately, is certainly ill at ease. And it is true that from this feeling of being uncomfortable all sorts of behavior problems and difficulties may arise. So in selecting your child's clothes keep the following points in mind: Season is one of the first considerations, the garment must be appropriate to the time of year. Next comes consideration of the practical features of any given garment—there room for free play of the muscles? Is the garment easy to get on and take off? Is there any workmanship is important, too, for a throw-together garment won't last long on an active child.

Always try to incorporate a new fashion note, nothing extreme, but something that will be individual and interesting. Growing children like many changes. Also they are developing ideas about clothes! Don't try to curb their taste too much. It is often surprisingly good! Confidence in one's appearance means a lot in life, and children should be given the assurance that comes from self-selected clothes! Clothing does not need to be expensive in order to be in good taste. Rather it is more a matter of spending time studying your child's type! With an eye also to what his friends are wearing, so he won't look too different from the others.

The complaint of many mothers that their children fail to take good care of their clothes, and for that reason don't deserve nice ones, should be applied in reverse. Often the feeling that his clothes are unattractive is back of a child's careless handling of them—he can take out his disappointment on a displeased coat when he can't on the mother who thoughtlessly bought a color the child didn't like. Of course, play comes first with children, as it should, and clothes are apt to get rough treatment. But it is rarely that you are justified in saying that a child has deliberately ruined a garment. Children grow fond of their clothes, if they are becoming and are truly sorry when accidents happen.

As for hand-me-downs, these are an economic necessity in most families, especially in these days of shortages. But you can always add a touch which makes a garment the second child's own—a new sweater for a hat costs only a quarter, a clever shoulder pin makes sister's suit more palatable, and a brand new blouse or sweater can make it all new.

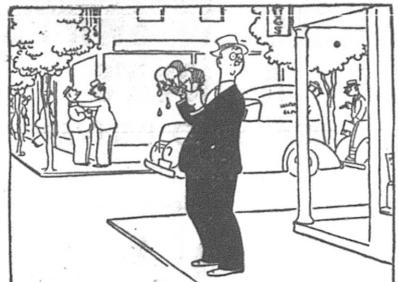

Indeed there is plenty of room for imagination and ingenuity in planning children's clothes. Many clever mothers have turned this knack into a successful career.

ABOVE the HULLABALOO

By LYTLE HULL
Give Us Liberty or Give Us Death

Recent rumors have it that the chief of the totalitarian (or dictator) states the aged and infirm are being compelled to exist as best they can upon the little which can be spared from the full dinnery of a society at war; and that pitiful breadlines have been established to care for those who can be of no further use to the state.

In times of peace and plenty the theory of paternalistic government—wherein the dictator-state takes care of all its "subjects"—may appear rather comforting to those who are physically afflicted or to those who are getting too old to earn a living. It must be quite a relief to stop worrying about the future and to feel that the last few years of one's life can be spent in a nice comfortable rocking-chair, surrounded by congenial cronies with whom to reminisce, and with three good meals a day.

This is the charming picture of carefree future which the advocates of the totalitarian type of government dangle before their prospective victims; and their promises are usually intended to be sincere. But even "totalitarians" are human and when the trials of war and famine come along, and hunger stalks the land, the dictator and his party members are going to "get theirs" no matter what happens to their "subjects"; and after them the army is cared for, and the worker and farmer, and what collar man—in the order of their importance to the war effort. And last will come those who are of no further value and who have no further power, having—with their other fellow countrymen—sacrificed their only weapon of defense—the ballot.

All of which is very "scientific" and "realistic" procedure no doubt—but not human, and hardly the best Utopia which the theorists promised to those who allowed themselves to become "subjects" rather than "masters" of their own government.

There is a system of government called "democracy" which our pink tinted "deep thinkers" consider outdated and believe should be exchanged for some unappealing "ism." This system teaches religion and parental love—two doctrines considered old-fashioned and non-"realistic" by the ideologists. To the healthy-minded followers of this freeman's system, the very suggestion of sacrificing those who had grown old and infirm—for any reason whatsoever—would be abhorrent and unthinkable. The normal Briton, Frenchman or American would rather starve than allow his parents to suffer from hunger or neglect; and woe to any elected government which ever even hinted at such a barbaric practice.

The needs of children is a shortage of food, but we know that everyone receives his or her proportionate share. What the Germans leave to the French is equitably apportioned we are told—and knowing the French—we are certain that this is the case. Even here we may soon experience the shortage of many foods which we have been accustomed to use plentifully; and our aged and infirm will be the last to feel the pinch.

Why should we wish to change our type of government for the other kind? We ought to scalp the maniacs who suggest it.

THIS WEEK IN WASHINGTON

Washington, D. C. (NWSN)—Beer, taxes and gasoline seem to be the chief subjects of controversy on the domestic front on the eve of the reconvening of congress. Many congressmen have returned to Washington for the new session which opens September 14—and they have returned with a determination to do something about the situations which, on their visits home, they have found to be most disturbing to the people who elected them.

Congressmen who are now in Washington say that the people at home have nothing but praise for the way the war has been conducted so far. But there is no doubt left in the minds of our representatives in this city that the people are expecting them to take fast action to improve many disturbing conditions on the domestic front.

The food problem is probably the most irksome of all to the majority of people, congressmen have found. The people don't object to rationing as such—and they are willing to go without scarce foods which are needed by the armed forces—but they are sick and tired of black markets and of scarcities in the midst of plenty.

The best situation is typical of those which have aroused the ire of the American people. Reports from the cattle states make it clear that there is now a record supply of beef on the ranches—enough to supply the needs of the men in uniform, to give some to lend-lease and still have enough left over to probably force their way through some action. It is unlikely that new taxes will be put through before the end of the year, but when they do reach the people but is also scarce in army camps. A lot of beef is being held on the ranches pending a better price arrangement.

SIX INCH SERMON

REV. ROBERT H. HARPER

Israel Called to Be a Holy People.
Leviticus 19:1-16
19:14, 11, 15, 32
Golden Text: 1 Peter 1:16
The lesson suggests a reason for God's care for the Hebrew people. They were called to be a holy people. For through Moses God said unto them, "Thy shall be holy, for I am a holy God. Thou shalt be holy because I am holy. His will be the basis of all morality. But this is not all. Thou shalt be holy in commanding respect to parents and else, the Lord said, "I am Jehovah your God. Thou shalt be good because God is good."
The second section of the lesson approaches the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount. Following several commands is given the great commandment: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." In the last section the Israelites were taught that they should love God, and they who had been strangers in Egypt were to love their neighbors as themselves. The lesson is applicable to our own time. It is a lesson of love, just treatment of laborers, kindness toward the afflicted, impartiality in justice, and an ideal of love for all men. Right respect toward age should now accompany respect toward God. We should make strangers who feel at home among us. Upon returning to the city where he serves, the writer, who often receives a great number of invitations, was invited to a launch trip about the port. It civic leaders, who were present, were so kind that we should welcome them in the church. And above all, remember that Christians are called to be things to be a holy people.
