Hamman Hog Sale A Success

A record crowd was in attendance last Wednesday night at the Hamman hog sale, conducted at the Lytle Hamman & Son farm, just north of Shiloh. More than 65 head of fine Spotted Poland China hogs were auctioned off, and the price was very good.

Exceptional interest among buyers was no doubt created by the fact that Ohio Pilot, one of the many fine boars owned by Lytle Hamman and son, won the grand championship at the Ohio State fair this year. There were buyers from four states, and many representatives throughout Ohio were present for the sale.

"There were not enough hogs to supply buyers and to fill mail bids," said Hamman, "and it was necessary for us to purchase hogs from the Mar-Wal farm at Bucyrus, and at the Sander's Farm in Marion to fill an order from one of our old customers in New Jersey."

The Hammans secured the services of Robert Beidelochs of Bucyrus to deliver the truckload of hogs to the Cream Ridge Farm in New Jersey. He was accompanied by Robert Hamman, who assisted in seeing that the hogs were delivered in good condition.

Boyd and Lytle Hamman have done a splendid job of improving porkers in this section of the country, and their annual sale is looked forward to by scores of farmers in this section who purchase the Poland China breed.

Youngsters Entertained At Foraker Home
On Thursday evening, October 27th, Miss Judy Broderick entertained a few of her friends with a Halloween party at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Kit Foraker.

The dining room and table were decorated in keeping with Halloween. The young guests came masked and after each were named, games were played. There was a ryp at the door and an uninvited masked guest entered; this caused quite a bit of fun and the guest proved to be Miss Grace Hancock, which goes to show the spirit of Halloween is still with us.

Guests departed at 9 o'clock following the serving of ice cream, small cakes and pop.

Teen Agers Feted By Police Department
As a reward for their exceptionally good behavior and attitude toward the curfew, the young people of Plymouth were entertained by the Plymouth Police Dept. last Friday night, by a 'hayride' and wiener roast.

The evening was definitely a success, according to the teen-agers and the sponsors, and between fifty and sixty young people and their chaperones enjoyed the hayride, the singing, and of course, the wiener roast which followed at the Plymouth park. Chief of Police Bob Meiser, Estel Watts, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Schreck assisted at the wiener and marshmallow roast. Tim Burser and Clyde Phillips drove the 'wagons' and proved to be good chauffeurs.

Thanks a lot, from all the Teen-agers, to the sponsors!

Mrs. Hattie Perry Observes 91st Birthday

Mrs. Perry despite her ninety-one years continues to live alone, performing her own household duties and is quite alert for her years.

Mrs. Perry is a member of the Presbyterian church, the Garden club and is still interested in the community. Best wishes are extended Mrs. Perry.

School Memoirs Paint Vivid Picture of Early Education Here

So appropriate is the description of the Plymouth school one hundred years ago, that we felt it very fitting to intersperse our history of Plymouth, written by Mrs. Bault, with her story and memoirs of schools here, especially since we are dedicating our new grade school building this Friday night. You will find a vast contrast between the small frame structure of pioneer days with that of the modern school of today.

Across the road or street was the High School, or more exactly the Public School building. This must have been erected about 1850 or soon thereafter. It was probably built as soon as possible after the enactment of the law authorizing taxation for free and public education. I think the bill procuring this law was fathered by Hon. Samuel L. Worcester, of Norwalk, the aforementioned friend of Lawyer Barker.

The building was a two-story frame, painted white. The halls on each floor ran through the middle; there was a large room on each side making four in all. The grades were Primary, Secondary, Grammar and High. I think the High School room was on the East side of the second floor. Each room had a platform on the north side of the room and a strip of wall, three or four feet above the platform and three or four feet wide was painted black for a black board.

"Over this, in the room I was in (probably first floor west) was hung a map of the world showing both hemispheres. To show how young I was, I recall that from these maps I constructed my belief that the world was a hollow ball, that we were inside of it and that the rim was the sky with the stars stuck on it somehow, and Heaven all outside.

"To show how advanced I and the others in the room were, I recall that we wrote Essays or rather "Compositions" as they called in those days. Friday afternoons were devoted to reading these, reciting pieces, dialogues and declaiming orations, this last falling solely to the boys; oratory had not become seemly for females.

"It was at this time that Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was coming out as a serial in the "National Era," a weekly paper published in Washington, D. C., which my father took and whose serials I read avidly every week. I chose at that time to write a serial as my composition entitled "Slavery." My opening sentence was "Slavery is a mean shame." This is all I remember of the story whose chapters continued through several weeks. It was undoubtedly a crude but innocent attempt of Mrs. Stowe's immortal Teachers.

"The principals (in the public school) I remember were the Rev. Mr. Spaulding, Jesse Markham and Charles Royce. MRS. Spaulding was really the boss and used to do the "licking." Her whip at that time was an umbrella. I recall one thing happened once in which I was implicated. We were given the alternative to go before the Board of Education or to sign our umbrella frame medicine. You bet I confessed.

"Mr. Markham was a smooth faced, scholarly faced middle aged man; I think he was well educated. But the finest was Charles Royce who had more than a local reputation as an Educator. Pupils came from other towns. One was Annette Spencer from Greenfield; another was Bethia Russell from Florence, Erie County. Miss Russell afterward married F. B. Case, late of Norwalk.

About the Earlier Schools
My memory brings me to where the roads fork (on that is now Plymouth) that the main branch going southeast, the right hand one going southwest; I do not know which one went to Shelby.

"On the west side of the left hand branch stood an old hand built time house; in it lived—I think—Mr. and Mrs. Hornbrook or was it Hornbeck? (This would be about 1800) and that tracks now run or just south of the A. C. & N. Y.

"There was a lot and house just north, towards the Square, of Hornbrook—in fact the lake in the point made by the forking of the roads. The house—it seems to me—was called "The Manse." There was a school kept there, 1848—I fancy, by the Presbyterian minister or his wife, I do not know. And I further fancy this minister was the Rev. Joseph (?) Hayes who gave up the office of the Norwalk Female Seminary to take charge of the Plymouth church.

"I afterward went to school to Mr. Hayes in the VILLAGE school house on the west side of the street toward the center of town. (This could possibly have been the very old building at an time occupied by Elias Heffer and his family, which was located very near the sidewalk at the turn of the Plymouth Street road as it heads down hill toward the Square.)

School In Manse
My memory of the school in the Manse is only a detached and trivial incident—I laughed out loud as looking out of the window I saw a scholar tip over on his sled going down hill in the back yard—but the one memory—inclining my chin at laughing audibly in school, proves there was a school there. (About where the town water tower is now.)

Oldest Church
"The Manse faced west. Directly opposite was the Presbyterian church. This chief landmark in my memory stood on the summit of a gentle slope over which the road to the south climbed. The picture in my mind is a picture indeed; graceful as New England Colonial edifices were, with a slender spire and on a hill, it was not only a landmark but an inspiring and a Guide to all that is highest and best.

The interior was simple and chaste; it seems to me that the pews had doors and the pulpit was raised high. The heating was furnished by two stoves near the front entrance, one on each side; the stove pipes ran overhead to the back of the church into chimneys one on each side of the pulpit. There were windows these pipes where they turned to enter the chimneys; under each elbow was hung a tin quart pail to catch any dripping snow.

"Some time when a little older I heard the expression "droppings of the sanctuary" and I thought of those pails. The gallery ran across the church over the front entrance; the singers and the nation were up there. I have already said that Robert McDonough and his family sat in the southwest corner of the wall seat. I remember but one other figure in the Sunday morning services, but that stands out conspicuously. It was a bald top of a head with plenty of hair below the bald space; some of this plentiful and rather long hair were brought together on top of the head and held with a big pin, a not very successful effort to hide the baldness. I think this was Deacon Brinkerhoff, a deacon away.

"I do not remember any of the ministers unless I am right about the Rev. Mr. Hayes. (The memory was correct, we find, upon checking with early Presbyterian history in Plymouth.) There was another one but I have no memory of him; but I have one detached memory of his wife. She was in charge of a company of little girls who met together in Mrs. McDonough's parlor to sew for Foreign Missions. At that time Plantation songs such as "Camp Town Races," "O! Savannah" were coming into vogue. Some of the girls started to sing one; the minister's wife, "shut them right up," she would have none of it.

"They had a nice living with them, "Vance Holcomb," but I do not know the minister's name. Vance went to Kansas I think and married a man by the name of Plumb.

"I used to hear of a retired minister living somewhere in the country; his name was Conger. (Upon looking into the records we find that Mr. Conger was one of the very rare and truly good men of history. Not only was he a fine man and popular early pioneer resident of Plymouth, but he was a good minister and tireless worker besides.) I think it was his son Evertson who had a hand in the invention of Jeff Davis, (or was it Wilkes Booth?)

"Back of the church was the old burying ground. I suppose some of it is there now. The old church was torn down years ago. I am sorry, for it was a memorial, not only of Plymouth's early settlers of the first half of the 19th century, but of the pious New England stock from which the settlers came.

"As we go back to town on the north side of the street my memory stops first at the home or homes of the Adams and the Seymours, the vague memories in my mind about these families I have already spoken of. It seems to me it was the Seymours house which stood next to the unfenced yard of the village schoolhouse.

that it was frame and painted white and that it had a side door and a side gate.

Village School
"The village school house comes next. It was the "little old Red one" sure enough but it was made of brick. As I remember it already in 1848—seemed old; it must have been built by the settlers who built the church.

"Its one front door opened into a narrow entry extending across the width of the building; in this entry the girls hung their hats or hoods and their shawls or capes and the boys hung their caps; I do not think the boys had overcoats or that the girls had cloaks.

"The boys wore long pants and short coats coming to the waist line (it seems to me they called them) "roundabouts" and the girls wore woolen dresses in winter, calico in summer.

"There was one door from the entry into the schoolroom. This school room was about 15 feet square. On one side of the door was the teacher's desk with a lid that could be lifted disclosing a receptacle into which went all apples, etc., or confiscations. This desk was on a little square platform about six inches high.

"On the outside of the door was the water pail with its dipper; this pail stood, I think, on a backless chair. Around the three sides of the room ran a broad shelf starting from the wall and six inches below was another shelf that didn't slant; the upper shelf was the desks for the big scholars; the lower one was for their books and slates. In front of the desks were long benches for seats. The big scholars faced the wall.

"The little scholars faced the center of the room, seated on long low benches with backs to them. In the center of the room was a fire in the iron stove shaped like a box about five feet long and with a door in one end big enough to take in a log of wood.

"On the teacher's desk was the "ferule," the instrument of punishment. The walls were the original color of the plaster. I think these were charcoal sketches of crude human profiles on the side walls; overhead there was a considerable eruption of "spittoballs." I remember but one teacher and that was the Rev. Mr. Hayes. I was not there very long for soon after I was old enough to go there the Public Schools were opened.

Another Early Private School
"On this street (Plymouth Street) down the west side was a point quite important in my life; it was the first school I ever went to—a story and a half wood-colored unpainted) house; the entrance to the front room was at the side. There was quite a yard about it and I think there was a big lilac bush by the front window looking on the street.

"The school was kept by a Mrs. Barker, the young widow of the son of Lawyer Barker; the son was killed by some unfriendly hand in Mansfield; whereupon Mrs. Barker and her little daughter came to Plymouth and opened this school. I went there about 1848.

times, too. If anyone saw Beany Ford with an extra pair of eyes on her cheeks—it was only part of her make-up for the party—that's in case she couldn't get the paint off for work Wednesday.

A prize was given to the one person whose identity the hostesses couldn't guess. Dorothy Redden won—she really had them stumped. Later small cups of fourteen different kinds of spices were passed around and a prize was given for the most guessed correctly. Lucille Ross won with 10 right. It's really harder to do than one would think. Pin the tail on the donkey was played and I, Marilyn Davis won by getting its tail in the proper place. Three had to do their own guesses for being farthest away.

A very nice lunch was served in an impressive Halloween setting. The large pumpkin face on the buffet was the hand-work of Dan Hohler—a very good job, too.

There were four of our members who were unable to attend. They were Zannette Fackler, Cynthia Reed, Anna Mae Miller, and Evelyn Burkett. Those attending were Patricia Bettae, Delores Bettae, Jean Smith, Lea Leininger, Lucille Ross, Dorothy Redden, Wilma J. Ford, Marilyn Davis and the two hostesses.

Reported by Marilyn Davis

Schreck brother got loose for the 60 yards and a score.

Beginning with next Sunday, November 6th, the first three classes of the Methodist church Sunday School will have Assembly at the opening of the hour. Parents are asked to take note of this change in schedule, and to see that all children in the Beginners, Primary and Junior classes are at Sunday School a little before 10 o'clock, so that they may take their part in the opening service together, and in the Verse Contests.
