October Weather

October, 1954, was a warm, wet month. The average temperature was 60.5 degrees, or 6.8 degrees above normal. The highest was 87 on the 2nd; the lowest 30 on the 30th, with the first killing frost.

Rainfall occurred on 20 days for a total of 5.24 inches — an excess of 2.83 inches above normal. The greatest in 24 hours was 1.20 inches on the 3rd and 1.15 inches on the 5th. The first trace of snow fell on the 30th and 31st.

While it was a poor month for harvesting, the rains were very beneficial for wheat and pastures.

November started off with five days of drizzly rain and snow flurries; then followed ten days (up to the 15th) of the finest November weather we can remember — ideal for bean and corn harvesting.

With Thanksgiving and Christmas just around the corner, it will surely make winter seem that much shorter!

The Mothers' Club Dinner

The enterprise of the Mothers' club in undertaking the traditional Thanksgiving dinner deserves the applause of every citizen of this community.

The food was good, it was served nicely, and although there were many who had to stand in line, for a spell before they could be served, we can charge that up to the fact that nobody knew so many would turn out for such a dinner.

It is unfortunate that effort such as this is necessary to furnish funds that rightfully should derive from the taxpayers. When a school building is built, it should be built, equipped and paid for by the patrons of the school district out of public funds. Technically speaking, it is forbidden under the law to give goods or services without charge to a public agency, but nobody ever complains about such donations - neither the governor the receiver.

The profits from the dinner will go toward the same purpose as all funds of the Mothers' club - the outfitting and equipping of the school. We hope this dinner becomes an annual affair. We wouldn't object even if it is necessary to build another building to hold the dinners.

And there is something else we can remember, with pride: interest such as these mothers have shown proves that we are interested in giving our youngsters a good education, in surroundings that are suitable for the most important job in our society today - seeing to it that our children's heads are screwed on in the right direction.

The Agricultural Census

We have before us a copy, in blank, of U. S. Department of Commerce - Bureau of the Census Form A-1, a four-page affair measuring 19 by 11 inches in size, and covered with fine print asking just about every question except when did we last have a row with our wife.

The form is in the hands of farmers in Plymouth trading area for completion and collection by a representative of the census of agriculture before the end of the month. Plymouth and Cass township farmers will deal with Ronald Howard of Shiloh route 2, a man who is sworn to preserve secrecy and who will politely and faithfully record the data requested.

Every farmer should cooperate promptly. For two reasons, we think.

First, because it is to the advantage of the farmer and every other American to have on file the most complete data respecting our agricultural establishment, for it is from these figures that our duly elected representatives are in part guided in their legislative activities.

Second, because it strikes a big blow for independence and for freedom. How? Think of the thousands of Europeans and Asians and Africans who will visit our libraries abroad to consult these figures, which are a state secret in many of their own countries. The fact that we publish these data is, we know, a great factor in convincing reasonable people that what Moscow says is untrue.

Nobody stands to have any harm done him if he complies promptly. The Department of Agriculture promises solemnly that the data will not be used for detection of tax evasion. Indeed, the law prohibits use in this manner. What is more, the only figures that will be made public are county summaries, not individual statistics.

We have heard any number of complaints about the wheat marketing program, and we do not doubt that we shall hear more. Cooperating with the agricultural census taker is one way to get one's views in front of the right people: at least the powers that be can't say they don't have the data.

So cooperate with Mr. Howard. Have your form ready. Or leave it with the Mrs. if you're out combining beans or picking corn.

Brooks Watts Reviews 'Rest Assured', Says OK

By Brooks Watts
The duty of the reviewer, it would appear, is to apply critical standards of excellence to the theatre as a means of appraising the players of their achievements on an objective basis. This works out very well with the professional stage, but not so well with amateur dramatics. For dramatics the art, and for the purpose of teaching young people poise and self-confidence, and it is in this framework that high school productions must be judged.

The comedy offered by the junior class at Plymouth High school Friday night is not a very good play, and the players did what they could with it. All in all, they did very well, despite the fact that the principal protagonist - Morlock - has a very weak role. The author simply did not give him much meat to chew upon, and young Jack McQuate deserves credit for his efforts in the role. He warmed up to his task in the second act and carried on nobly to the final curtain, gaining self-confidence as he exacted audience reaction and showing that he will develop into something of an amateur thespian with more experience.

The play has a flimsy plot, one which has been worked to death and which offers the theatre lover no relief from televised corn, and it is unfortunate that the role of Luigi Lanconi could not have been played straight. Francis Dorwin did a good job, considering the vocal handicaps of the role, and carried the action well.

It was the female roles that brought delight to this reviewer, in part because they were better roles, and in part because the young women who played in them did so well. This was notably true of Mary Robertson as Mrs. Morlock and Lenore Briggs as Jessica, the younger daughter. Miss Briggs is a bright and sprightly ingenue who should do well in amateur theatricals.

Makelle pleasant for your mail-man with a new attractive wrought iron mailbox, $5.95 to $12.95. Household Shop, 111 W. Main, Shelby.

icals. Bette Carter made a fine secondary and Carol Evans held up her end of the drama particularly well in the final act.

Tom Marvin hit his stride as George, the attorney, in the second act and worked his lines for responsive laughter with some aplomb, and although he was on stage for only a few moments, Floyd Noble, whose name was inadvertently omitted from the ad, notices in The Advertiser last week) showed he understood the elements of drama in the role of Mr. Black, the mortician.

It is unfortunate that the size of the likely audience limits the performances of such an enterprise to one, when the performers have little opportunity to strike a proper stride and do well by their roles. A longer run presentation always gets better as it goes on.

The minor roles offered little opportunity to the players to show outstanding work, but John Fetters made a convincing Dr. Brown and Bud Berberick was very satisfactory as Joe Lanconi, the young swim.

Sandra Vogel had a transitional role, and her portrayal of the unlettered domestic was well done. Mary Brinson as Luigi's departed wife, appeared briefly with effect. The roles of Ted Ross, as Lucifer Wilma Corbett, as Mrs. Schmalz, Gerald Lilo, as Jake the newsboy, and Peggy Burrer and Gene Baker, as Mrs. Fink and The Man, were not badly played at all, and young Ross and Miss Corbett in particular had a number of opportunities for laughs.

The pleasure in having two seats on the aisle for such presentations is one which we shall have only once annually, more's the pity. On the next occasion, we would wish for two things: a little less makeup on the players, and a little more courtesy by the young hoodlums who jeered the music offered during the entr'acte.

Next year, for the third year in a row, folks in this country will continue to eat red meat at the rate of 153 to 56 pounds per person, USDA specialists predict.

Around the Square
- By Phineas Whittleseed -

Ordinarily we don't pay any mind to anonymous letters. But one came in on press day that's interesting. It is in the form of a yellowed clipping of a piece titled "Home ownership", which observes that every young couple desires more than anything else to own its own home, only the bugaboo of a down payment prevents this. Accordingly, they have to rent. The piece says "It seems that some understanding contractors, builders, real estate firms or other interested persons could construct some four, five or six-room houses with basements in a price range from $3,000 to $6,000. They could allow us, the young people, to pay for them as rent under a contract basis with a reasonable rate of interest. I have read numerous articles where other cities are building homes for these figures. Why not here?"

A pencilled notation in the margin says "I think part of this could be used at present", by which Phin assumes the sender realizes how completely out of or six room house with basement. Put a "1" in front line is that $3,000 to $6,000 figure for a four, five of each, and you've got something like it.

But the argument is a good one, except it is not realistic. People are simply not that way. They don't go about building houses for sport. They do it to make money. And in small towns, they're harder with the dollar than elsewhere, where big volume allows of small markups.

True, young people shy away from small towns because they can't find places to live and, in the early stages of marriage, at least, are unable to finance their own construction. But there's another point: the small towns don't particularly want young people if it means that the town will grow bigger and the need for more schools, more public services, more debt increases. Young people have a way of wanting sewage plants, and new water systems, and parks and recreation centers and such - all of which must be financed from the public purse. The older generation, which makes up small towns generally, will fight to the last ditch to keep control of those strings.

So, ma'am (it looks like a lady's handwriting, though we may be wrong). Phin fears you're barking up the wrong tree. But he thinks, too, you're justified in barking.

Bonnie Hanan announced the Mothers' club dinner at her house Nov. 8, when Tourist club ladies heard her tell when, where and how much.

Jas. Cunningham handed us an important looking piece of post the other morn, and remarked that lawyers must be after us, because the return address was University of Michigan law library. Turned out the contents was an order to forward a copy of a book we didn't own, with a pretty good cover, title, and the order was a blank check. Shame of it all was we don't have a copy of said book on hand, and - sad to relate - it's out of print.

Our friend Ron Mumen has a new address, he tells us, and hopes folks will write and let folks know what he's doing. His address is F. A. 572-4634, USN, Radioman school, Class 9-55, S. S. C. U., Naval Training Center, Bainbridge, Md.

The P-TA has a meeting tonight to discuss comic books and their influence on the small fry. If the teenagers pick up this opportunity to be heard, leave us have no complaints later on if the number of comic books available is decreased. There must be two sides to every question, though we haven't heard the teenagers' arguments. So, c'mon, teenagers, if you think you're right on the comic book question, turn out and tell the older folks why you think so. Maybe you've got something, the know's?

At breakfast these morns of late we've had Rich Myers and Big Joe Lasch as pancake-eaters. You've got to be a strong-willed character to face up to pancakes in the morning, so they tell me. Pancakes ought to be thin, not too big around, just firm enough to resist immediate penetration by hot butter and maple syrup, and piled about four high.

There're some who like an egg, sunny side up, right on top, and occasionally we like 'em that way. But mostly with those little's of hot sausages, fried dry, and lots of elbow room.

Which reminds us (almost anything for a story, y' see) of the lady who visited a psychiatrist.

"Doctor," quoth she, "my family thinks I'm insane and I've come to you about it. You see, I'm fond of pancakes."

"Why, so'm I," responded the doctor. "What's wrong with that?"

"Oh, I'm ever so glad, doctor," said the lady. "You must come to see me at my home - I've got suitcases full of pancakes."

That first basketball game is Saturday night. At North Fairfield, and the team needs encouragement and support. Turn out, fans, friends and filberts.

About two weeks ago, two members of the community buttonholed Phin as he was walking to his shop and made the point that it was the older generation that made this country, and now that it is growing old and living on fixed incomes, no young squirt such as Phin is will drive the older folks out of town, and we refrained from asking these people how many times they've been shot at in defense of the republic. We didn't think it was polite. And we made a mental note to watch out for them if they display a flag on Armistice day. They didn't. We drove around town and counted the flags that were displayed. Performance was better than on Labor day and on the Fourth of July, but still the number didn't equal, say, Greenwich or New London, to both of which we drove later in the afternoon.

Without rancor, we have this to say to election day patriots: patriotism works all year, and don't be yelping to us about how much you fought for the nation if you don't even display a flag on holidays.

Now that the football season is over, how about a dinner for the boys?

Congrats to Bob's who ran the chip joint on his merriment as an interested and significant honor-worthy member of the Masonic lodge.

Al Newmyers Feature Broilers

Every elementary school pupil in Plymouth knows that Mrs. Minna Newmyer is annually responsible for about 30 small fry in the second grade. But her real claim to fame is her husband, Al H. Newmyer, master of the household in Millersburg, northeast of the village, is responsible for 10,000 small fryers a year.

The Newmyer farm, which has been in Mrs. Newmyer's family for over four decades, is a neat establishment in the east side of the road south of Route 224 in New Haven township and since the sale of 138 acres last summer, it now measures only 30 acres.

Which is just enough for the broiler operation which Al Newmyer runs on his place in a snug concrete-block, raiproof building, equipped with gas heat and an automatically operated water system that could house 2,500 broilers at one time without crowding.

The present crop is about 16 weeks old, and in a couple of weeks will be thrust into pens, loaded on the truck, and fetched to Cleveland or Akron for sale. They'll weigh about four, maybe four and a half, pounds apiece, just right for frying chicken.

The market is down right now, Mr. Newmyer says, "but you have to count on that this time of year, when everybody is bringing poultry to market."

Hard work? Yes, it's hard work, but the first three of four weeks are harder than the rest. Why? Because the birds are young, frail ones die, the heat has to be kept up, resistance to swat infections is low, some just don't thrive as well as others.

"But after that first three or four weeks," says A. H. Newmyer, "it's just as easy to look after 50 dozen as five."

His layout shows why this is true. In three rows down the length of the building are hung 30 patented metal feeders, suspended from the ceiling by ropes which are adjustable as to length.

"That's so the things can be lifted as the birds get bigger," he explains. "Each one of them holds about seven dry gallons of mash, and it has to be refilled every day."

Water is furnished through patented watering troughs equipped with floats that start the water flowing in the trough when its level drops below a predetermined point. The water flows into the troughs by gravity from the water system. And into the water system?

The Newmyers give a facetious grin to that question. "We haul it from Willard. You see, when those birds really get thirsty, they'll take 70 gallons an hour."

In fact, keep in those water troughs clean and filled with fresh, cold water is one secret to growing good broilers, Mr. Newmyer reckons. Another secret is choosing good chicks. "If you start with good stock and take care of it, you're sure to end up with something that'll pay off," is the way he reasons. "Of course, good stock costs you a little more, but it doesn't pay to be a penny-pincher as to breed of chick."

All of the Newmyer broiler are of Plymouth White Rock strain, and there isn't a barred or colored plumage bird in the flock. Precursors like the white-feathered bird because the skin makes up smooth, unmarked with ugly pinfeathers, and less hairy than the barred variety.

What happens when you've just sold a big crop of broilers? "Well, then it's time to start in again. You call the hatchery and order your next lot of chicks and then you get the building ready," begins Mr. Newmyer, who says he smokes only once a day, and that's all day. He's partial to cigars, which he says are his only vice.

The tidiness of the farm shows that laziness is certainly not one of his vices. "Then you shovel all of the old litter out and scrub off the floor. New litter - sawdust, dried and chopped corn cobs, peat moss are just some of the base layers that can be used - is laid on, the watering troughs are scrubbed out and the feeding cylinders are prepared with starter mash, and you're ready to start up the heat."

"For the first few weeks, that heat has to be kept up to about 90. We use gas for those two big heaters you see up there," he says, pointing to the two outlets.

And what're those fans for? "Oh," he replied, "that's some of the planning that went into this building. Notice we have more windows on the south side than the north, and the two big fans are in the north wall. When it's hot in the summer, and the air over the chicks is close, we take out some of the windows on the south side and start up the fans, which suck air across the heads of the birds from south to north. This gives air circulation and a change in temperature of the air, which is warmed by the heat of the birds and the heat generated in the litter."

The Newmyer broilers never touch bare ground. They never go on range. "You really don't need to any more the feed has all of those vitamins and elements you find in greens already in it," he explains.

Don't think it's easy to raise broilers, or that it's job is free of headaches. "You take those chickens, some times they'll take a notion to run into one corner of the building and they'll smother some of the weaker ones. You've got to move around them easily, without stirring up too much noise," says Mr. Newmyer.

Mrs. Newmyer lends a hand when her school duties are over, and the children - two older girls and a boy - pitch in and help out from time to time. But Al Newmyer has it down to a pretty handy one-man operation, a tribute to his Dutch sense of organization and the traditional Dutch insistence on orderliness and neatness.

24 Ladies Hear Twentieth Century Musical Program

Members of the Twentieth Century circle heard a musical program devoted to the lives and works of Franz Schubert and Felix Mendelssohn (Bartholdy) Monday night when the group met with Mrs. H. James Root.

Mrs. Lois Ramsey, Mrs. Alice Armstrong, Mrs. Edna Dick and Mrs. Grace Dick comprised the program committee, with Mrs. Grace Dick as commentator.

Recordings played by Benny Root punctuated the presentation, notably Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" in B, and Mrs. Armstrong rendered "Linda", a song which Schubert wrote.

Schubert died, it was brought out, at 31, after having written over 500 songs, seven symphonies, 20 sonatas, six masses, and dozens of string quartets and other musical forms. Despite his prowess, he left an estate of $20.

Mrs. Ramsey played several waltzes by Schubert by way of demonstration.

Although he is known generally as Mendelssohn (son of Mendel), young Felix Bartholdy was to the manor born. He had the best teachers, and when he showed signs of musical brilliance at an early age, his parents encouraged it. "I Would That My Love" was sung by Mrs. Edna Dick and Mrs. Armstrong, and Mrs. Armstrong played the celebrated carol, "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing", written by Mendelssohn.

Mrs. Dick made her debut locally as a soloist by singing "Oh Rest in the Lord", a very touching and haunting number, taken from the oratorio "Elijah", accompanied by Mrs. Ralph M. Felix. The concluding number was a trio, "I Waited on the Lord" by Mmes. Dick, Ramsey and Armstrong.

Mrs. Root served refreshments to 24 persons. The next meeting will be Nov. 29 with Mrs. Helen Lofland.

If you believe there is no difference in gasoline, the world's first BORON gasoline may change your mind!

3 out of 4 report IMMEDIATE IMPROVEMENT with Sohio Boron Supreme

During the years you've been driving, you may have tried first one brand of gasoline, then another. After making the rounds, perhaps you finally decided, "Gasolines are all alike."

But now there's a new kind of gasoline on the scene. Boron Gasoline. It is changing the minds of thousands of Ohio drivers who thought there was no difference in gasoline. In fact, three out of four drivers who have reported their experience with Boron Supreme have said they noted an immediate improvement in the performance of their engines!

Here are a few typical comments from motorists who were users of other brands:

"Would never believe a gasoline could be so different. It's wonderful."
"Definite improvement over any gas I have used."

"Could tell the difference in first tankful."

"It has a difference you can feel in the performance of your car."

The outstanding performance of Boron Supreme is the result of three major achievements:

1. Sohio's exclusive Boron Gasoline discovery—a new way to liberate power in engines;
2. Aviation anti-knock fluid—never before used in automotive fuel;
3. A new, cleaner-burning basic gasoline formula.

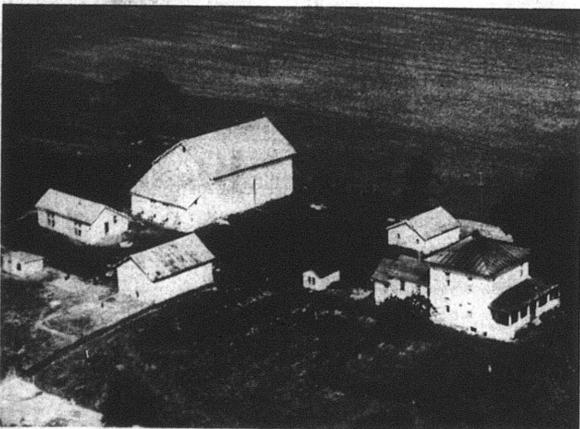

If you have not yet tried Sohio Boron Supreme, we believe you may be very pleasantly surprised at the results you get with your very first tankful.
