Feichtners to Mark Golden Anniversery

John and Albert Feichtner and their half-brother, Frank Albright, mark this week 161 years of marriage, and the Feichtner brothers will celebrate golden wedding anniversaries Sunday. Invitations are out to about 150 friends and relatives to attend an open house from 2 to 4 p.m. at Willard Grange hall, where John and Blanche Newman Feichtner and Albert and Edna Kothenko Feichtner will receive congratulations for a full century of wedded life. It was a bright night on Mar. 15, 1905, when John Feichtner, who was farming his aunt's place in the Tiffin road west of New Haven, told his younger brother, Charles, that he meant to go off and get married. Charles didn't tell John that their middle brother, Albert, had the same notion.

The John Feichtners were married in the parsonage of the Evangelical United Brethren church in Chicago Junction by the Rev. L. C. Summers at 7:30 p.m. and the Albert Feichtners were joined as one by the Rev. J. W. Schillinger, Lutheran pastor, in his residence in Kantz street, Chicago Junction, at the same hour.

Edith was the daughter of Gustavus Adolphus and Emma Rothenshoefer of the thriving little railroad town, where he was an express messenger. Albert was the son of George and Louise Lever Feichtner, who lived on the farm now occupied by the Moore family in the south side of Fox that road west of New Haven. Albert was born there.

To the Albert Feichtners was born a daughter, now Mrs. Lenora Perrell, wife of Samuel Perrell, keeper at Birmingham. The John Feichtners have two sons, one who farms near Willard and Dale, in the declining business there.

Florida Fine, But Watch Out

At least three Plymouth residents can tell you that Florida is pleasant, but beware of the trip home. Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Steele of Shelby route 3 are patients in Emmanuel County hospital at Swainsboro, Ga., as a result of an automobile mishap. A rear tire blew out, causing the driver to lose control of the vehicle. Mrs. Steele fractured her left wrist and sustained a twisted neck. Mr. Steele dislocated a shoulder and received a gash over the right eye. The car overturned, pinning Mr. Steele's arm underneath. Mrs. Steele managed to crawl from a window.

They had intended to visit Camp Gordon, Ga., to see their sons, Wilbur and Denton. Both children have been able to visit their parents. Another son, Lewis, and a daughter, Mrs. James Gullett, have proceeded to Georgia to fetch their parents home. Mrs. Ira Brounger is carrying her left arm in a cast as a result of a fall received while she was visiting a friend who wasn't home. Mrs. Brounger says she was walking in a patio and slipped, breaking the left forearm during the fall. It is the second time she has fractured that arm.

Her physician in Dallas reports that radiographs received from the referring doctor in the south show a good knit, and the prospect of a prompt recovery.

"Sicily, the Three Corners" was the topic chosen by Mrs. Edward O. Ramsey for the Feb. 28 meeting of the Tourist club, which met at the home of Miss Virgie Fenner after a dinner at Cornell's.

Because the island is three-cornered, the name was given to it by the ancient Greeks, who called it Trinacria. They began its colonization seven hundred years before Christ. Sicilians have always been fishermen and fish plays a large part in their diet, but they also enjoy forms of spaghettis, which they call pasta. Instead of meat sauces, they concoct sauces from the fish and other small sea life found along the coast.

Tuna fishing is the great industry of the island. No one knows for certain where the tuna come from, but their movements are well timed, and huge nets are spread to catch them. Tomatoes play a large part in the economy of the island. They were brought back by Columbus from the new world, and today are indispensable to the Italian diet.

BED WETTING STOPPED

NO DRUGS — NO ATTACHMENTS — NO DIETS

Your child's progress in school, whether he or she is kindergarten or high school, can be hindered by this humiliating habit. Research has proven that children who suffer from bed-wetting may not progress as fast in school as other children. Officers recommend the chance to develop, free of this tension. The announcement by Shelby elements that plans are afoot to establish a municipal court having jurisdiction over that city and the four northwesternmost townships in Richland county comes as no surprise.

Shelby as a city has grown enormously during the past 20 years. It is ideally favored with industry, and the location of the Wilkins Air Force depot against its back door merely added to its potential. Not many folks are aware that with .0000x per cent of the nation's population, Shelby does .0000x plus per cent of the nation's business on .0000x minus per cent of the national investment. Statistically speaking, Shelby is a retailer's gold mine, despite the fact the city is not notorious for its overenthusiastic merchandising.

Shelby will grow as it has grown, and we might as well erect a monument to that group of people in Shelby who wanted to see it grow. They worked, hard and long, often without verbal - not to say fiscal - credit, and the result is evident to all who will see.

We do not take anything away from Shelby, but we would call attention to the fact that if Shelby - and Willard, for that matter - continues to flourish in the next months to come, and we continue to tread water in the face of economic facts that a blind man can see, we as a community will soon be reduced to a big - well, not very big - bedroom.

Now bedrooms are all right, and we sleep in one every night. And a bedroom is, we suppose, a very comfortable and useful room in a house. But a bedroom does not pay its own freight. The householder has to make hay in the kitchen, or the garage, or the basement, or elsewhere, to pay for the bedroom.

We have no householders except ourselves. So long as we are all working and bringing home a pay check every week, well and good. The need to look after our future is not so important. But the blunt truth is that we are not all working, we are not all bringing home pay checks every week, and the signs are, so far as we can see through the smog thrown up before the eye and ear, that the situation will be worse before it is better.

If there is another, perhaps better, way out, we'll hold still, listen, and help in any reasonable way. But it is as clear as an April afternoon that something has to be done, and done promptly.

The eggheads call it leadership. Leadership means not only the willingness and ability to think in a far-sighted manner, but to act that way, whether or not it hurts in the vicinity of the pocketbook. Leadership is the highest attainment of those who do not aspire to it, who have the ability to lead, owe it to the rest of us to exercise that ability.

Let's have some leadership. Now.

Second Location Settled in County Was Near Bellville

The second settlement within the present borders of Richland county was made in 1809 on the Clearfork, where Bellville now stands, and was called the McClure Settlement. The first election in Richland county was held in 1811, called Jefferson was organized Aug. 9, 1814. Among the early settlers we find the McClure, the Moody, the Leedy and Garber families. The Gattons came to Richland county in 1819, followed shortly by the Howards Walkers, Gurneys, Alexanders, Beams, Whitneys, Bells, Mahagans, Thrallisms, and Gibsons from Maryland. The Laferty, Robinson, Leedy, Garber and Swank families came originally from Pennsylvania. The Red Horse, nine mile south of Bellville, was one of the most popular taverns in the old stage days, and of all the places of public entertainment between Columbus and the lake, none surpassed in general favor this Red Horse Tavern. It was a favorite place for balls and other public functions, but when the railroad was built through Bellville, in 1850, the stage and stage taverns were relegated to the past. Although James McClure was the first settler where Bellville now stands, the town was named after Harriet Bell who owned the site. The original plat of Bellville contained forty-eight lots and embraced the land between Main and Huron streets. The first lot sold was to Fnoch Ogle-let No. 1 - at the corner of Huron and Ogle streets.

Ogle built a house at once and opened a tavern - the first in the township. Ogle was a prominent man in his day and had a host of friends. The block house and McClure's cabin antedated Ogle's tavern, but the latter was the first building erected in the town proper, after it was platted. The second building erected was on Lot 5, in which Richard Crawford conducted blacksmithing. Harriet Carter brought the first stock of goods to Bellville and occupied a room in Ogle's Tavern. A postoffice was established in 1824, with Isaac Hoy as postmaster. Prior to this date the residents of Bellville received their mail at Marietta and the postage on a letter was 25 cents. John Moody operated the first grist mill and was also a celebrated preacher of the Christian denomination. It is said that he never turned away a poor man, without giving him some assistance along life's journey. The Methodist sect were the pioneers in the religious field and built the first church edifice in 1855. Captain Miller Moody, son of John Moody, the philanthropist, was the captain of the celebrated company I, 16th O. V. I., "First Call Troop" and lost his life at the battle of Gettysburg.

The Saga of Uncle Billy Hatch

With photos to John Greenleaf Whittier, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and other assorted versifiers, Phineas Whittleseed offers below a poetic tribute on the occasion of the forthcoming 97th birthday of William Hatch.

'Twas the fourteenth of April in fifty-eight,
And hardly a man will forget the date,
When up from the meadows rich with corn
Our Uncle Billy Hatch was born.

Nor will man forget that day and year,
But will with great and timely cheer
His voice in howling triumph raise
To herald the ninety-seventh of his birthdays.

'Twas on a farm 'twixt Shelby and here
In President Buchanan's year
That William first saw the light of day,
And then in life began to make his way.

Who thought that from the way things are
He'd spend his life rolling the cigar.
Aye, a cigar maker our William was:
From tobacco he'd strip the fuzz,

And wet it with moistened lip,
And roll it down to a very fine tip.
And later on, when he'd reached the top
Among cigar rollers, he became a cop.

For a decade of years and then a twenty,
He served our town with vigil plenty.
And another quarter century he filled the
Of Plymouth Township constable.

Youngest in a family of nine was he,
And now the eldest will he ever be.
For all the others have gone to the grave;
He's the only one of the lot we have.

Twice he wedded, women good and true,
Laura Thomas — she died in Twenty-two —
But first to Harriet, child of Amos Hilborn,
Who died when she was by time so worn.

His kin of an immediate kind
Can be readily brought to a ready mind:
A son named Dale, who left the West,
And a daughter here, Mrs. Earnest;

And another girl in industrial Lorain,
Mrs. G. C. Mittenhuber's her present name.
Now of our Bill there can this be said,
That he'll be remembered when he's long dead

As a man who was of children enthused.
They always kept him highly amused.
And like Kipling he was enamored of smoke,
Of work and books and a jolly joke,

With the Cramers now he dwells,
And of the past he readily tells.
(She's a niece of his only sister,
And he talks of how he's missed her.)

So right today, a month ahead, very nearly,
We tender our thoughts, very dearly,
To Our Uncle Billy Hatch —
He'll be awfully hard to match.

Around the Square

— By Phineas Whittleseed —

Travel, Phin has always maintained, is a broadening and stimulating experience, and our experiences Sunday were right along that line.

We took our small fry to Cleveland to see Gene Autry, the king of the cowboys (down, Roy, down). Come noon time, we entered a fashionable, sophisticated restaurant, filled with late church goers and others of Cleveland's hoop-de-do set who were out on the town for Sunday dinner. We were seated and commenced to order.

Suddenly, almost everybody in that large room turned without notice to a table near the front center, where there stood a family with bowed heads. The father was at one end of the table and the mother at the other, and there were five or six kids in between. His head was bowed and his big hands were played across the heads of two of his boys, holding them down.

And it was apparent they were praying. They were asking grace. And the sophisticated folks in our great big city stared at them bugged. And when they were through they sat down and, we could see, they ordered fried chicken. The kids had their napkins tied around their ears and they ate with their fingers.

A thing like that perhaps happens once in a blue moon in a small town, and maybe never in a great big city. But we'll bet any time the food tasted better to all of us in the room because we saw somebody who was humble enough to ask his thanks of God in a public place.

And then at the Arena, Mister Artery put on a show that filled the vast enclosure with kids from six to sixty. His show is not a high-pressure thing, and he demonstrated what a real showman he is. Two or three times (and we were sitting next to the stage manager's brother, by happenstance, and we knew what the manager must have been thinking) he holered "whoa" and changed the lighting and the sets so everybody could see. Then he got down on his knees and picked up a few of the shell casings of the .22 calibre rounds fired by himself and by Annie Oakley. These he tossed to the kids.

When he invited the kids to sing with him, he chose a number they all knew. For the life of us, we couldn't have put our fingers on a song they all knew. We've chosen something like "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" or "Sweet Adeline". But he chose "Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer", and he had the lights turned down while they sang it. It was a real thrill to hear our own kids' reedy young voices rising above the throng.

We put aside cowboy stuff nearly 25 years ago, maybe more. It never thrilled us much when we were kids - we were too much interested in Lou Gehrig and Babe Ruth and Carl Hubbell and Mel Ott. And we're not particularly sold on shooting and such for young kids.

But if kids have to be amused, we'd rather they be amused by a man of Autry's type, with his attitude, and with the clean, low-pressure show he has.

Yesir, travel is a broadening experience, and a stimulating one, and Sunday was no exception.

Nor are we the only ones who think so. Take the case of Luther Fetters, who returned from a trip last week. A passenger on his plane, he noted, was strolling up and down the runway nervous as a cat on a hot roof, and he spoke kindly to her. She turned out to be Dorothy Fuldaheim, the renowned television comedienne, just returned from the Far East where she had talked with His Nibs Chiang Kai-Shek and with those two pitiful eggheads who were released by the Reds after a monstrous brain-washing.

It isn't every day, says L. R., that a man gets a chance to talk with someone who's been there and talked to the people of the Four. To say the least, it makes the dull ride home seem less so.

Our Suzie came home this week with her first official report card. Wasn't a thing on it that'd make a father mad, but somehow we like the personal touch it has. It proceeded the usual Mrs. Port's informal comments on how she was doing, gave us much more insight into the child's character and adjustment to school work.

If it takes more money to our overworked teachers to get that kind of service, what of it? The individual attention of the teacher in a small class with a detailed, personal report of the child's activities in those important formative years is worth whatever is the additional cost.

There's a little boy down our street who's just shy of school age. His mother says he spends his time from morn till night watching the cars go by. And the lad wants to know why there're fewer these days than there were previously. Hadn't noticed, sonny, perhaps somebody has the answer.

The return of the mayor from Frostproof, Fla., prompts Phin to take his hat off in print to the manner in which Royal Eckstein ran the job while he was gone. Cheers, friend.

The mayor has said again this is his last year in the job, and he has even hinted he plans to turn over the license issuing task to another. And it is reported that the village treasurer wants no part of the job any more.

The departure of any civic-minded citizen from the ranks of the village service is a cause for regret, and anything of who doesn't feel that regret is a fool - excepting, possibly, the individual themselves. But there is one certainty about life that we mustn't forget: you can't just stand still. Equilibrium - what Buck Rogers used to call "suspended animation" - is still something for the comic books. You either go ahead or you go backward. Going backward is unacceptable as well: everybody is against it. Trouble is, everybody doesn't think the same way about how to go forward.

One step would be to combine the clerk's job with the treasurer's job, as recommended on the other side of this page previously.

And another would be to hold salaries right where they are now, for everybody, until we see how things work out.

Purebreds Pay Off--- Hamman

L. B. Hamman, the veteran breeder of Spotted Poland China hogs, will tell you a truism if you'll hold still long enough: it's cheaper to feed a purebred hog than a grade hog.

He's spent nearly a generation finding that out, and another generation he's spending selling the idea to others. In fact, that's what he does on the 230-acre Hamman spread in Noble road northeast of Shiloh. He breeds Spotted Poland China boars and sells them as breeding stock to pork raisers all over the country.

The secret to successful pork raising, says Lyle Hamman, is three-fold:

1. Choose a hog like the market wants.
2. Get it to the desired market weight in from five to six months.
3. Reduce the amount of care necessary by breeding sows that'll farrow big and take care of their young.

Once you've chosen your hog, says Mr. Hamman, you'll learn soon enough how smart it was to choose a purebred hog. For purebred sows drop bigger litters, and take care of them better, and because by breeding the piglets are disposed to size, their feeding does them more good over the same period of time.

Last October the Hammans, for family reasons (his folks were ill), broke the chain of semi-annual hog sales at their farm. But they're resuming this spring. Next sale, Apr. 16, a Saturday night.

The Hamman farm has been in Mrs. Hamman's family for nearly 150 years. Her grandfather, the late John Noble, was born on it Feb. 23, 1829. His father had hewn it from the thorn and scrub of the Western Reserve perhaps 15 years before that.

When the Hammans went on the farm in '25, there was no electricity and no utilities of any kind. Shortly after, current was strung down the road and the gas line went through their dooryard.

Some years ago, they sold an acre off the ground to their son, and his house and dooryard occupy it. Aside from the fact they each pay their own taxes, there's no particular difference.

"The Hammans also maintain a milking herd, this one of half Holsteins and Guernseys. They're purebreds, too. 'Whatever I've got in the way of livestock, it's purebred,'" says Lyle Hamman. "Even old fas-range. And that a nursing sow will get up and walk away from nine of her own piglets running from her if a tenth - a stranger - comes up. She wants to keep what's here for her own.

Every year, the Hammans go off to find a new blood line in a boar. Once, they went into Indiana, saw perhaps 500 young boars, but nary a one that pleased them. Their son reported that Walter Michaels, wealthy Bucyrus breeder, had some piglets from a good sow. They looked at them, chose a boar pig at a stiff price, brought him home, and made a State Grand Champion out of him.

The Hammans work closely with the FFA and 4-H movements, believe in them wholeheartedly and encourage youngsters to undertake purebred hog projects.

One of the oddities on the farm right now is a pair of heifer twin calves, handsome little brown-and-white C a e r n s e y s barely three weeks old.

Mr. Hamman's "soosey" call is flavored with Beechnut chewing tobacco, and he's a pretty good caller. But he uses the "soosey" of the commercial printer to summon buyers at his semiannual sales, and his literature will soon be out to prospective buyers in 12 states to come to Shiloh Apr. 16.
