

Union Omits 30-Day Notice to Fate-Root-Heath, Strike Fizzles

A National Labor Relations Board negotiator met yesterday with Fate-Root-Heath Co. officials and officers of Plymouth Order of Mechanics, the company's union, in an effort to conciliate differences which led to the village's first strike in nearly 40 years.

The union's membership, after voting overwhelmingly to strike effective Monday morning (only eight members voted not to strike), walked out at 7 a.m. Monday, picketed the plant, and allowed only key officials to enter the grounds. President John A. Root was permitted to pass the picket line, as were William E. Root, vice-president and general manager, Paul Root, a vice-president, Miss Madeline Smith, receptionist, a maintenance man and an electrician.

The strike was called because the company's last offer was a six-cent-an-hour increase across the board as opposed to the union's demand for 10 cents added one day a "guaranteed annual wage" for each year of employment with the company. Union officers said the 10-cent increase if granted, would still place skilled men of 30 years' seniority under a basic $2 an hour, which they termed "lower than any industrial plant in the state."

The company's attitude, on the other hand, was expressed by William E. Root: "The company simply can't meet the union's demands and stay in business."

A truck belonging to Clarence Riggle, an officer of the union, was placed astride the access road to the main office of the factory and pickets were assigned tours of duty to enforce the strike.

By Monday afternoon, the company had taken counsel of its legal advisers and of the NLRB at Cleveland. H. James Root, personnel manager of the firm, was the negotiator. NLRB officials held that the existing contract had been breached by the union by failing to give written notice of 30 days, and consequently the strike was illegal.

Some office employees were called back to work Monday afternoon, and Monday night the union met in an after special session to plot its course thereafter.

In a stormy session, the membership voted to return to work Tuesday, and at 7 a.m. all 233 men had reported on the job. The company did not give in to any of the union's demands, and when the union reportedly asked for another conference with company officials Tuesday, it was firmly told the whole matter would remain in NLRB hands.

The union's officers made no secret of the fact that their demands for a day's "guaranteed annual wage" for each year of service in the company's employ were "bargaining factors" — to be for-saken under pressure of company bargaining in an effort to secure the wage increase.

Plymouth's only other strike is said to have occurred 40 years ago, when white workmen walked out in protest of the hiring of "two trainloads" of colored workers brought from Chicago by the late Charles Heath, then general manager.

Union spokesmen claim that no wage increase has been granted the union's membership for 21 months. Their contract, according to the same officers, "expired 90 days ago", and some were reported to feel that breach of contract on an expired agreement could not be proved. The union has no regularly employed legal counsel.

When, several months ago, it was necessary for the company to cut back its work load because of a deficiency of orders, the union maintained its demand for a wage increase. Company spokesmen implied the demands were unreasonable for this fact alone, apparently based on the reasoning that if the company could not afford to keep a full staff on the job 44 hours a week, it could hardly manage a pay raise.

Negotiations for an increase have been going on, one union officer said, for nearly 10 months. A company spokesman attributed the strike to national developments generally — "it's in the air", he said. "It's a question of who's running the plant."

If quotas are approved, the national average price of wheat will be supported at about $1.81 per bushel. If quotas are not approved, the support level will drop to $1.19, Mr. Nolan stated. This year the support rate for Huron county growers is $2.14. Growers who exceed their allotments will not be eligible for price support, Mr. Nolan added.

Quotes were approved for the first time last year when 73 per cent of those voting voted in favor of marketing restrictions. A two-thirds vote is needed to place quotas in effect.

Let's Have Some Leadership, Men!

Five Years Ago

The indefatigable Dr. Gallup has ascertained, by methods he considers accurate and with conclusions he claims to be valid, that Mr. Eisenhower could win the presidential election in 1956 on either major ticket.

By corollary, Dr. Gallup finds that any other Republican running at the head of the GOP ticket could not probably whip the Democratic nominee if he should be Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois.

We have studied the results of the latest poll in detail, and we frankly have reached an impasse: just what does it mean to be a member of a major political party these days if that membership does not respond to the party discipline?

If a Republican crosses over his party line to vote for a Democrat, who ostensibly stands for the principles of the Democratic party and therefore represents all that a Republican holds to be hateful and bad for the country, merely because he likes the sound of that candidate's voice and the size of the dimple in his chin, then isn't it true that political party membership is meaningless?

And, likewise, if a member of one major political party accepts the candidate nominated by the national convention and goes down the line for him only because he waves the banner, where indeed is our democracy?

For our part, we have never been able to see why the party wheelhorses insist that all of the nominees of the party are better candidates than those of the other party. Mr. Eisenhower himself sees that the wheelhorses are wrong, and to tell the truth about it, if we were Arthur Summerfield, we would hang our heads in shame. Not only because of the poor postal service he gives us, but also — and mostly — because the party has not supported and is not supporting its nominee.

Honest, we try hard to be good Republicans, although we are frank to admit that most of the time the party has been entirely wrong in its foreign policy.

But we are business people, and we recognize that the fundamental difference between the two parties right now is the money policy: the Democrats support a policy of cheap money, the Republicans support a policy of a firmer currency.

Republicans of the Eisenhower-Dewey-Lodge-Dulles-Humphrey-Martin stripe do, anyway. Republicans of the Bricker-Bender-McCarthy stripe are not worthy of the name Republican, and at the risk of losing control of the reins of government, we honestly wish they would secede and establish a party of their own. A party which, we might add, we feel confident the American people will soundly defeat.

If your dollar buys more now than it did three years ago, and we think it does, there is none to thank but the Republican party. Or, at least, that part of it that is responsive to the leadership of Mr. Eisenhower. Unfortunately, you won't find many of its members around here. And darned few in the whole state.

Around The Square with Phineas Whittleseed

Sunday was Children's day in a good many churches, and ours was no exception. It comes once a year, and it takes the same pattern. But it never grows old.

Back when we were so very young, we, too, participated in Children's day ceremonies. We remember once when instead of saying our "pieces," we shouted out "I see you, Mommy!" and broke the congregation up into laughter. And another time when a lissome blonde did the peachy strip tease it has ever been our good fortune to witness. She was only three, and she had less to take off than Gypsy Rose Lee.

In our home church, it was always the custom to bedeck the pulpit with flowers of the season, and Children's day was the one Sunday of the year when the choir was permitted to throw back the green velvet curtain that hung on the choir rail and peep down on the dais to see the kids, many of whom were their younger brothers and sisters.

Many are the Saturdays we have helped with said bedecking, and when our Mom was superintendent of the Sunday school, we had to raid the family garden for posies.

After a while, it got to be competitive. For flowers, anyway. The Methodists and Baptists had to stagger their Children's day observances so there'd be enough flowers available, but so far as we remember, there was never any such agreement between the First Reformed and Second Reformed congregations: it was dog eat dog.

The county jail had the nicest display of hydrangeas in town, and the sheriff and the jailer had charge of distributing the largesse to inquirers for the lovely white, pink and blue blooms. The jailer's nephew, who lived with him, used to tell us that he knew when Children's day was coming up because a lot of strange ladies were calling at the side door of the jail with cakes and pies for Mr. Jim, the warden. And so far as memory serves, he always shared the blossoms equally with everybody.

Sitting in First Presbyterian church Sunday, when our own kids were performing (we hope satisfactorily), we were hit hard in a certain sea of nostalgia, and when Mrs. Fetter's little one, a little youngster with a forgotten phrase, we could see our own promp-ter there 30 years ago, feeding us that forgotten word so we could get it said and get sat down.

Thiss and thatts and olla poirida; the midget softballers got a good start Thursday and will work out again today, at 2 p.m. W. M. C. called at the field last week and gave the boys two new softballs, for which their and-our thanks.

Bob Heiser tossed a dead owl on our desk Saturday morning. Doc Haven't was nearly scared out of his wits and a year's growth by the presence of the handsome bird in his basement, and summoned the gen-amer, who dispatched it with one shot.

His markings are truly beautiful. An artist can paint, but only the Man Upstairs can fashion such genuine beauty.

And speaking of owls, Dan'l Henry went out of town on a trip and fetched a bambino owl home. Just a wee thing it is, and probably not able to be domesticated. Besides, catching live mice and such to feed it will probably wear Dan'l down to where he couldn't hold the mouse, let alone catch it.

Animals do the strangest things. And our hound is up to it again. Our younger burst into the den the other night and screeamed that Cookie had disappeared in the cellar of a neighboring house.

We went there and Suzzie pointed out the window into which he had chuzed a cat. We looked around on the cellar floor and whistled, but no sign of the dog.

About to give up, we called once and heard a feeble yelp. Young Dan Carter appeared and looked down into a dry cistern for the beast, with no luck.

Then he volunteered to jump down inside it, and truth to tell, he found the dog. How he got there no man can say.

The cistern is six feet high and completely without exit or entry except that it is open at the top, with a clearance of perhaps 10 inches between it and the floor joists. The cellar window opens onto a very small part of the north wall of the cistern. Cookie apparently dashed through the open window after the cat, which continued on its way along the parapet of the cistern, the dog, being clumsy, fell in.

Anyway, thanks to our neighbor's patience with our insistence that the dog was at Cave the Wind's cellar, and thanks to young Dan. And our appreciation for the neighbor's call to inquire if the dog were all right. Whatta mutt!

One of those calls that amazes you came out of the blue - or maybe it was the black - Saturday night long after we had retired. One of our favorite characters, who lives near the Cave the Wind's cellar, the national capital, rang us up to give us a pat on the back and an invitation to eat turkey at his new home come Thanksgiving. To both of these we said thank you, and truth to tell, the first had as much if not more nourishment for us as the second could ever have.

LET'S EXPLORE OHIO

Migrating herds of buffalo in following the watercourses and the eastern grades through the wilderness, engineered Ohio's original highway system. Indian necessities were these trails deeper and the white man's axe widened them into wagon trails. Today many of our paved motor roads follow these same routes. When the Ohio Country was an Indian paradise, their main travel routes were north and south between Lake Erie and the Ohio River and east and west along the lake shore, the Ohio River and across the middle of the State. The Indians had many side trails that led off the main routes to the salt lakes, to their villages and to the flint mines where they obtained material for their arrow heads.

Important crossroads on the Indian travel routes were such present-day Ohio cities as Fremont, Columbus, Cincinnati, Canton, Youngstown, Marietta, Dover, Circleville, Coeburn, Portsmouth, Cambridge, Lebanon, Cleveland, Delaware, Upper Sandusky and Cincinnati.

Substituting the names of Ohio cities, this map shows the travel routes in the Ohio Country as they were used by the Indians before the coming of the white man.

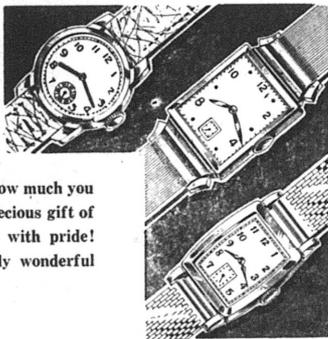

A man hears all kinds of things about the faithfulness of man's best friend, but here's an instance of the faithfulness to an ear of corn. There's a squirrel living in a tree outside the Methodist parsonage (doubtless one of those chased off President Eisenhower's putting green) who's a fancier of corn. And in the house there's a small white dog belonging to William Rogers, son of the Rev. and Mrs. T. M. Sheesley, who sits watchfully at the foot of the tree, hoping — apparently — the corn will drop. Or maybe he's hoping the squirrel will fall, too. At any rate, he's faithful, and here's proof. — Advertiser photos.

Like Frosting on Cake
ADDDING shutters to a house is something like frosting a cake. In many cases, the shutters will make a great improvement. An easy rule for determining the correct size is to measure the window and make the shutters the same height and half the width.
A simple way to make attractive shutters is to cut a panel of Masonite 1/4" Tempered Presdwood to the desired size, bevel the edges slightly with a file or sandblock and make V-shaped score lines as illustrated with a scoring tool. Use two backer strips of 1 by 2-inch lumber.

The decorative cutout may be removed with a keyhole saw after drilling holes at the corners. Instead of this, you might attach the cutout of a tree, or other figure, which can be cut with a scroll saw or similar tool from a scrap piece of the Tempered Presdwood. Attach it with waterproof glue.
Prime and paint both sides of the shutters before you attach them to the house.

The Village shall also have the right, in the event of non-payment as aforesaid, to discontinue service to such premises of water supplied by the Village's waterworks system until such unpaid sewer charges have been fully paid." SECTION 2. Said Section 7 is amended to read as follows: "Section 7. That each sewer charge levied pursuant to this Ordinance is hereby made a lien upon the premises charged therewith and, if the same is not paid within ninety days after it shall be due and payable, it shall be certified to the Auditor of the County in which said premises are situated, who shall place the same on the tax duplicate, with the interest and penalties allowed by law, and be collected as other municipal taxes are collected. ## Hilborn Believes in Weed Killer

Merrill Hilborn is a veteran Tiro farmer who believes in the efficacy of weed killer. Right now, he's wishing for a sprayer big enough to handle the fence rows on his 87-acre spread astride route 39 just outside Tiro.

The Hilborn place is the only farm between Route 39 and the village, and the Hilborns have been on it just over 20 years. The farm has been good to them, and if the weather will only improve, Mr. Hilborn expects some luck with his four-year crop program this season.

Weeds are only one threat to the crop program this year. Another is the wet, cold weather. And a bigger one is the federal crop control program, which limits the veteran Tiro farmer to only 11 acres of wheat this season.

The crop rotation on the Hilborn place runs wheat-corn-oats-hay, and Mr. Hilborn expects to take a slightly smaller hay crop from about 11 acres this year.

"In a normal year, a man ought to have two hay crops and he can expect about two tons of hay an acre. I'm hoping what I'll get this year will carry me through the winter."

Just what can the average general farmer expect from an acre of cultivable ground? Well, it varies. That's the general answer. In northern Crawford county and western Richland county, something over $70 an acre a season seems right, Mr. Hilborn says.

"That works out to about 25 or 30 bushels of wheat an acre at roughly $2 a bushel, and the value of the wheat straw as fodder or litter."

A man who has, say 80 acres planted entirely to crops thus should anticipate an annual cash income of about $5,500. If he has hogs and cattle, the income on some acreage from crops will naturally be down, but the cash sale value of the livestock will be up and will compensate for the loss.

The Hilborns currently have about 55 hogs, standard breeds, which provide a good cash income.

"The price of hogs is about 20 cents right now, and I don't think it'll go much higher," says Mr. Hilborn.

What's the small farmer going to do if the government won't let him plant enough wheat to earn the cash necessary to keep him going?

"Well, he can plant soy beans, although the market kind of slipped last year for a while. And he could plant rye or barley. Barley makes good hog feed and a lot of farmers use barley to fill out their fields. But that rye, why, it grows high as a man's waist and it's darn hard to combine. That's why farmers don't like to have much to do with it."

What's a farmer do when it's too wet and cold to get into the fields? "There's lots to do. Today I'm hoeing the garden patch, getting weeds out of my beans and peas and tomatoes, even though it's too wet to hoe. But there's always plenty to do in maintaining the place that'll keep a man busy if he'll only get at it."

The Hilborns are milking six Holsteins, selling the milk for some ready cash income, but otherwise engage in general farming.

Mr. Hilborn was born and raised in Tiro, thinks it's a "pretty nice little town", and likes to reflect upon the days "way back when — when Tiro had a doctor in residence, when the snow banked up the roads so bad they were marooned, and such.
