

55-60% per rate increase to cost schools $9,000 in '80

A 55 to 60 per cent increase in electric rates for schools in Plymouth decreed Nov. 7 by village council will cost the school district about $9,000 next year, Supt. John Fazzini told Plymouth Board of Education Monday night.

He said he will seek during the appropriations considerations to find the funds to meet the additional expense.

The board was occupied with routine personnel and administrative matters.

Paul Gase, guidance counselor in the junior high school, was hired as assistant girls' basketball coach.

Proposals to adopt a policy governing sale of "junk" foods, whether in liquid or solid form, and to adopt proposals for the reporting of suspected abused or neglected children were tabled for more study.

Baccalaureate and commencement exercises will be conducted in the high school on June 1, the time to be decided later.

Teacher-parent conferences for elementary pupils were approved. Kindergarten conferences will be conducted

Dec. 6 and 7. Parents of pupils in grades one through eight will be invited to meet with teachers on the evening of Dec. 6 and all day Dec. 7.

Tammy McDaniel, a ninth grader in Willard schools, was accepted as a tuition pupil.

Annika K. McGinnis resigned as full time bus driver and requested a leave of absence so that he can retain insurance coverage. The resignation was accepted but the leave of absence denied.

Mrs. Charlotte Adams was hired to replace him for 127 days beginning Dec. 19.

Mrs. Donald Baker, nee Patricia Christner, was hired effective Nov. 12 as assistant cook in the Plymouth cafeteria.

A letter from Mrs. Robert Spensler, president of Friends of Kids, now called the Plymouth Parent-Teacher Organization, was to the effect the group expresses its concern that crossing guards are not so numerous as it had hoped.

Additional payment in the amount of $75 to Mrs. Gerald Lillo was authorized because she has completed additional study.

Councilman Edward O. Ramsey asked if "some of these people can be eliminated." In view of the ambulance being involved in the accident, he believed it broke up the council members.

Echelberry suggested that serious thought be given to placing a one mill levy on an upcoming ballot since the present vehicle, which is second hand to start with, will soon not be able to qualify to state standards.

The police department came under fire from Councilman G. Thomas Moore on some of its bills for equipment, which Police Chief W. Robert Seel defended by saying it was necessary.

Later Councilman Ervin Howard asked why Seel had his own "private" cruiser. Taylor came to the rescue by saying it was needed so Seel can reach the scene of a disturbance faster.

At the moment the village has three cruisers in use. Two are rather newly purchased used state patrol cars while the third one is one of the original purchases.

The mayor pointed out they had been purchased for a price ranging from $1,200 to $1,500, which was cheaper than the $6,000, which the last new cruiser cost about six years ago. Volunteer work and members of the department have put the used vehicles in good running order.

Head lice infest pupils

A number of children in Huron county schools have been treated with head lice. Dr. Howard C. Sparks, health commissioner, reports.

He counsels parents to wash children not to share combs and hair brushes and not to trade hats.

"Don't think this only happens to the poor and impoverished," Dr. Sparks says.

Lice won't go away, he says. Shampoos to kill lice can be purchased over the counter at drug stores. Until recently, it was believed these shampoos not only kill the louse but also its eggs, called nits. This is not always true, Dr. Sparks says.

All nits must be removed from a child's head before he can return to school.

"Parents should inspect the child's scalp daily, looking closely for nits or scratch marks. A louse cannot live more than 24 hours without a blood meal."

Huron county health department is a film strip for children and one for adults and will show it on request.

"Call the department at 668-1622 to be sure a nurse is available in order to check your child," Dr. Sparks says.

Complete disappointment and frustration marked the recessed meeting of the village council Nov. 7.

The regular meeting had been recessed so the council could know the results of the Nov. 6 ballot, in which the proposed income tax was delivered a resounding defeat.

"At the suggestion of Councilman G. Thomas Moore no action was taken to reinstate the tax."

The council will apparently hide its time.

A town meeting is planned for today, 7:30 p.m. in Charles Rhine armory in Sandusky street.

Members of the council want enough to attend so they can explain the whys and reasons for the passage of an income tax for the village.

The last town meeting the council held was a disaster. No one showed any interest to know why the village council felt an income tax was necessary.

Councilman David A. Howard said that the council has received "total bad media coverage in the village" and that the outside media should be recruited.

Councilman Michael Taylor turned to him and said, "You should take care of this."

Howard's six proposals for an austerity program were quickly adopted by the council.

They are:

1. No overtime for any employee; compensatory time will be given.
2. No more purchases of equipment that is not absolutely necessary.

The village administrator and the police department are to lay off any employee not really needed.

4. The electric and water committees are to check the current rates and raise them as necessary to cover the costs of operation.

5. Terminate the police equipment fund, which is now being taken from a percentage of the fine money, and direct it completely to the general fund, of which it is a bookkeeping entry; the police department will not be allowed to buy any equipment it finds necessary.

6. Every service the village is now giving for "free" as electricity to Weber field and water to the swimming pool, be charged.

The reaction was immediate. Mrs. Moore, plus costs of printing of forms.

Moore said the time is not ripe to retract the income tax because it had been defeated so badly.

The other members of the council seemed to agree with him.

These must be paid now.

The committee composed of Taylor and Moore presented a new rate schedule for electricity charges, which will eliminate the four grades applicable to rates in the Village of Plymouth. These are residential with and without a hot water heater and commercial with or without a hot water heater.

What is being proposed will raise the minimum rate about 50 cents a month to $3. It now hovers around $2.48 for the first 60 kilowatt hours.

Larger commercial users will not have a reducer because of their usage, but will pay for each kilowatt hour as every other user.

Another member of the committee volunteered how much more revenue this revision will bring in, but each hopes it will help to offset the loss of revenues in the electric fund.

Disappointment... Council to conduct public meeting today to seek consensus of where to go next

Ambulance funding by new levy hinted

Should a one mill operating levy to fund the ambulance service be placed on the ballot?

Assistant Fire Chief Kenneth Echelberry, who is in charge of the ambulance service, thinks so and he said as much to village council on Nov. 6.

He told the council a little progress is being made collecting back bills owed for services. He pointed out that since July 1, 30 runs have been paid out of $4.

He commented that "there are too many deadbeats, and the ambulance fund can end up in the red."

Shiloh buys cafe

A long-standing business on the Public Square changed hands Nov. 1.

Joe Deskins, 30, Shiloh, bought Bob's cafe from the Terrence Hammans. Mrs. Hamman, nee Roberta A. Meiser, had operated the business since the death of her father, Police Chief Robert L. Meiser, who bought it from his son-in-law, Aian Heydinger, New Washington. Heydinger bought the business from Clement Reuter and Robert J. Wefter, both of whom have since died. Ruffing and Wefter acquired the cafe from William and Robert Fortney. The elder Fortney has since died. The Fortneys acquired the business from F. Britt Lofland, who had operated it many years. He also has since died.

Deskins says he will continue to run in Shiloh. He is making application for transfer of the liquor license.

Salvation Army undertakes Yule appeal

Mayor Elizabeth G. Paddock, chairman of the local service unit, announces the beginning of the annual Salvation Army Christmas appeal.

For those of us who have plenty, we can anticipate a joyous holiday season, with our family and friends.

"But what of those who are accident may have wiped a family out, financially. There will be no toys or treats for the children this year. Older people in hospitals or nursing homes feel especially lonely at Christmas. Men and women behind bars know more despair than joy during the holidays. Some individuals drift in a haze of drugs or alcohol; they have completely lost touch with family and friends."

"But the Salvation Army knows how to reach these despairing ones. By sharing through The Salvation Army, you can make it a joyous holiday for those less fortunate in our community," she said.

At Ohio Power, we have people who show you how not to use electricity.

Our Customer Services people are experts on saving electricity. And we mean experts. If you know three ways to save on hot water: they can show you even more. They can give you plenty of ideas on how to use your refrigerator more efficiently, how to save electricity when cooking and ways you can save electricity when washing, drying, lighting, heating and cooling. They'll even show you how to buy appliances that cost less to use.

Some of their tips you already know, some you'll kick yourself for not thinking about, and some may even surprise you.

Our Customer Services people will be happy to answer your questions. They also have some S.A.J.E. booklets that show you how you can save energy and become part of our Save America's Valuable Energy Program. Stop by for your copies. They're absolutely free.

At Ohio Power, we want you to get the most out of your electric service.

THERE ARE TRAFFIC JAMS UNDER THE STREET, TOO.

"With steam pipes, water pipes, gas and electric lines crisscrossing every major street, planning a new phone line can be like solving a three-dimensional jigsaw puzzle. I have to plot everything out in advance to make sure the digging is done with the least disruption to street traffic and the lowest possible cost to the telephone company. And that helps keep your phone bill down. That's why I'm proud to be one of the people General Telephone is talking about when they say 'We keep you talking.'"

Let's get football out of our schools

By Cynthia Parsons
Education editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Boston
There's something very wrong about football as a junior and senior high school sport.

It's not just the injuries, though there are an estimated 325,000 of them a year for secondary school youngsters. And it's not just the cost of uniforms, training equipment, and playing fields — although it is more, far more, than any of the academic subjects.

And it's not solely because it does not lend itself readily to mixed boy-girl teams, or even coordinate male-female teams.

There's something inherently violent about football; about a game that approves of one child hurting another badly enough so that one of them will not be able to carry out his assignment. While football players can and do contain each other without hitting or hurting, the frequent pileups on the field are testimony to the more brutal aspects of this sport.

If you are on the defensive line, you want to keep your opponents from getting past the line of scrimmage. And if you are on the offensive line, you want to make sure that none of your opponents can pass the scrimmage line. To do this, you hit the other player — body to body — hoping that your opponent will be confused, unable to do what he has been ordered to do.

Yes, each of the youngsters who play football wear padding to protect themselves as they are hit and battered. And there are rules and penalties for vicious and malicious hitting.

And, admittedly, there is some strategy involved as you try to outsmart your opponents, running left when they think it will be to the right, passing when they think you might run, and kicking when they least expect it.

But even at the high school level, as at most colleges and in almost all pro

Newton, Massachusetts
By Peter W. Malli, staff photographer

Should he play football when he grows up?

games, the coaches decide which strategy to employ and not the players. The players are just so many physical bodies, ordered to hit, tackle, push, trip, and contain.

Why, if some 325,000 high schoolers are injured playing football each year, do so many US high schools offer tackle football as a sport?

Why, indeed?
For many high schools, it's a service to the colleges. High schools are the training and proving grounds for college players. The coaches in both public and private high schools keep in close touch with college coaches, letting them know which prospects are better than others.

For a good many other secondary schools, football at that academic level is a substitute for college football in towns where there are no such institutions. Maybe these youngsters are not being tried out for college; instead, they are providing sports excitement and entertainment for other students and a handful of adults in the community.

And perhaps at some others, tradition has taken over from reason, and should the high school teachers and authorities honestly rethink their purpose as an academic institution, they would drop football all once.

There are many good sports available to high school youngsters. And while there is the possibility of injury even in the mildest of noncontact sports, statistics show that no sport even approaches the injury level of football.

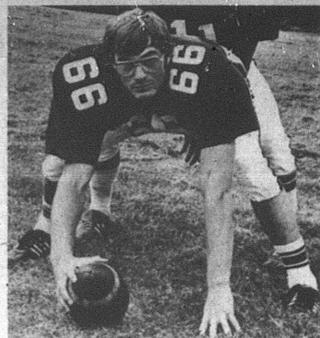

And, too, many high schools are finding that coed soccer teams are not only fun to watch, but exciting as well, and the instant strategy needed to make teamwork out of individual effort provides high schoolers with more than body-bruising football ever will.

Is your local public high school still playing football? Is the private school where you send your children offering football?

Challenge this: Challenge the reason for teaching children a sport that is based on bodily contact and physical containment; challenge the "macho" image that asks girls to play the role of cheerleaders and sympathizers instead of active participants; challenge the fact that the youngsters are not involved in decisionmaking; challenge the notion that injuries are commonplace and "to be expected."

College men are not involved in compulsory schooling. If they want to play the game and take the physical punishment, and the college women want to relegate themselves to the sidelines, then so be it. But high school boys and girls attend school because they must and because the community says there is something they want those children to learn.

Let's not teach them to be puppets for those who want to be entertained by such a dangerous and — for the students — pointless sport.

Four on all-loop team; one due back in 1980

Four Plymouth players were chosen on the first all-Blackfork Valley conference football team, two on offense and two on defense.

Defensive players are Gary King, tackle, and Bill Hudson, corner back.

League champion Crestview placed 10 players, five on offense and five on defense, although three of them are repeaters.

Offensive selections of the Cougars are Fred Stimpert, quarterback; Lyle Chronister, end; Richard Kuhn, tackle; Vernon Dyer, tackle, and Scott Pruner, running back. On defense the Cougars placed Stimpert, Chronister and Dyer and Randy Kaple and Brian Birchell. From the runner-up Lucas Cubs, Paul Culler, Tom McNeely, Fred Fischer and Rick Hardin were selected on offense and McNeely, Fischer, Byron Banks and Scott Cox on defense.

For the first time an all-league team was chosen for volleyball. Two Plymouth girls won honors. These are Pamela Garrett and Darla Kernell.

Others are Mary Ramsay, Karen Kochheiser and Kathy Kochenderfer, Crestview, and Lynn Spencer, Lucas.

Cook helps raise $1,800 in fraternity relay

Steve Cook, Plymouth, recently participated in the Muskingum college Kappa Sigma fraternity's relay race celebrating the International Year of the Child.

The relay was a service project of the fraternity, with the proceeds from contributing pledges going to Children's Hospital in Columbus, Twenty-five men participated in the relay, from New Concord to Columbus, and the arrival in Columbus was two hours ahead of schedule. The surprising number of pledges made the venture rewarding, with $1,800 being contributed to the hospital.

Cook, the son of Mrs. Ruth K. Cook, 48 Plymouth street, is a senior biology major at Muskingum, New Concord. He is also a member of the varsity tennis team.
