

What's the problem?

Elsewhere today there is summarized the response of some of those to whom the village planning commission sent questionnaires relating to consumption habits and needs.

We didn't answer the questionnaire. Why? Because we thought, and still think, the thrust of the questionnaire was all wrong, the questions were loaded for a static response, perhaps to reinforce the private wishes of some of the commission, and there was no sense of the reality of 1984 and the remainder of the decade in it.

To have said so wouldn't have done any good. Why?

So far as we know, no plans to make the responses completely public have been made. It may be that to do so won't solve the problem or contribute anything worthwhile anyway. Why? Because when one asks to see the material, he is labelled. Which is not to imply that the label is bad, although an inference to this effect would, probably be valid. But he is labelled all the same. When a citizen asks to see a document in the official village files, he is labelled. His interest draws comment, even speculation of what he is up to.

Perhaps this is human nature. If it is, more's the pity.

Benches and prettying up store fronts and sidewalk repair and such don't come anywhere near touching the problem, which is, how do we recover the competitive market position we had 20 years ago with such investment of time and money as we can muster? It's a matter of sales. If we can't sell, we can't survive. And if we have something that consumers want, yea, even though we offer it from a dung heap, they'll fight to get it and pay for it at the advertised price.

How to make it work?

That Mary Fate Park pool is now officially the property of the village may or may not delight the relative few who use it, but the fact cannot but bring despair to the taxpayer.

The pool has been a losing proposition almost from the start. Save for the first one or two seasons, it never was able to meet its obligations. And this, please note, with the benefit of free water from the village. For so long as the village was pumping its own water from the well field in the northwest corner of town, it wasn't much cost out of hand (but think of what it may have meant over the long pull in forcing us to contract with Willard, and pay through the nose to do so!). Now, with the need for the village to pay for what water it gets, it is clear the village has assumed a greater burden than what that appears at first look.

Nor is there any sign that income at the gate and from sale of season tickets, and from profits of the concession stand, will come anywhere near meeting the expense of operation.

How, then, will the village meet these expenses?

Perhaps the present shrewd management of municipal balances by the clerk-treasurer may develop, over the long run, sufficient income to come close to covering the deficit. But the village council needs to realize that some citizen-electors may not wish their money, and it is their money — to be applied to this purpose. Nobody questions the right of the village council to appropriate funds for any lawful purpose, and the swimming pool is certainly lawful. Whether it's ethical for the village council to do so, on the other hand, is a question of whose ox is being gored.

Should the expense of financing the pool be submitted to ballot? To do so will probably be akin to inviting the hangman.

If we do not learn the lessons of history, we are condemned to repeating our mistakes. This was a mistake. A big one. Now we've got to figure out a way to make it work.

And when we do, we'll have a whale of a lot of money invested in what is, neither more nor less, a huge baby-sitting operation.

That the race ought to reproduce itself goes without saying. But should it do so at the expense of those who've already done their reproducing, and paid for it?

We think not.

Three held in meleé at Shiloh

A fight in front of Bauer's Market at 8 Main street, Shiloh, May 30 resulted in arrest of three Shilohans and a juvenile.

J. Michael Bauer, proprietor of the establishment, reported to sheriff's deputies a fight was in progress. Deputy Roger Casler said the fight had broken up when he arrived.

Bauer said Thursday night "they were even fighting in my store".

The three are Robert Botello, 19, 8 Mechanic street, Shiloh; Gregory Neal Hicks, 18, 9 East Main street, and Ezzel Hicks, 23, East Main street, who was taken into custody at his home.

Deputies say they found that Botello and the juvenile were in a 1974 Ford LTD when Gregory Hicks sought to stab Botello with a knife as Botello sought to drive away from a parking place in front of the market.

Botello threw a metal frame that he carried in his car toward Hicks and struck a parked truck instead.

Hicks is then said to have gone to his mother's home, where Ezzel Hicks left and got a club. The juvenile took a swan-off broom stick.

The juvenile, apparently frightened, ran home. When his mother came to the door, the Hicks left and went home, deputies said.

Bookmobile sets visits to Shiloh

Pool sold to village for $10,000

After 15 years of ownership and operation by a non-profit corporation that was unable to fund its obligations, Mary Fate Park Pool, Inc., has been sold for $10,000 by Farmers Home administration to the Village of Plymouth, which is undertaking some repairs and intends to operate the recreation facility this summer.

The pool was opened on Memorial day, 1969, after a fundraising program that produced about 10 per cent of the cost of the pool, which was constructed on land donated by the late Luther R. Fetters at one time trustee of public affairs and mayor of the village, and Mrs. Fetters.

When the non-profit corporation that held title to the pool fell in arrears in payment of interest and principal of its debt to Farmers Home administration — the original obligation was $72,000 — please see page 5

On Aug. 1 — Two Shelby doctors to open internal medicine practice

Two doctors of osteopathy, specialists in internal medicine, will open a practice of that specialty at 8 West Broadway on Aug. 1.

They are Dr. Robert Zee and Dr. Harris Friedman, both of Shelby, where the former has conducted a practice for some time. Dr. Friedman is newly joined to the partnership, under a program by which physicians assisted in their training by the National Health service may be excused from practicing at the government's option on its assignment if they will open and conduct a practice in an area designated by the federal government as an under-served health area.

Early in February, a territory surrounding Shelby was declared to be such an area. So was a territory proscribed by the boundaries of Venice and Reed townships in Seneca county, Auburn township in Crawford county, the northern halves of Plymouth and Cass townships and all of Bloominggrove and Butler townships in Richland county and Richmond, New Towns, Ripley, Greenrich, Fairfield, Norwich and Willard townships in Huron county.

Dr. Zee and Friedman are already staff members at Shelby Memorial hospital. They have applied for staff privileges at Willard Area hospital.

A physician who practiced here briefly, having come from Greenwich, and then moved to Willard announces he will terminate his private practice and accept assignment as an emergency room doctor at Willard Area hospital.

He is Dr. Avadhut Pai-Dhunge, whose practice here was at 10 East Main street.

Dr. James Holloway, a dentist, announces he will withdraw from the practice of dentistry here to move to Florida, to locate in the Ft. Myers area. His associate, Dr. Jeffrey Stoller, will continue the practice of dentistry at the same location, 4 East Main street.

What's right? —

Is it enough to bow to what one knows not?

He could hardly be called kempt. His age is about 30. His hair reaches to his shoulders. That on his face is about two inches long. Neither that on his head or his face had been washed for some time. Perhaps he couldn't. He drank only with his left hand. The right arm and hand are pitifully deformed, obviously the result of a severe wound. In a brief time it was clear he had been to Vietnam and his arm was shot up there. He confessed that his employment since his discharge from a military hospital has been minimal. Small wonder. With that arm he could, probably even now can, do very little.

The veteran of another war, one that this week observed one of its finest hours, was there because he wanted to see the championship boxing match. He had seen the earlier fight at home. His wife prompted the television set to see what she wanted.

Introductions of the participants followed their difficult penetration of crowded aisles. One was black, the other white. The black was the challenger. The disabled veteran spied the black on the television in the bar, gulped his whiskey and washed it down with some beer and said, "Them parking niggers. There were a lot of 'em in Nam. All they did was shack up with gooks. Now they've got some parking bastid runnin' for president. We ought to shoot him too."

The neighbor gulped and said nothing. It is better to let fools speak as he run on without remorse, particularly in places where strong drink is served. When the principals were brought to the ring, the announcer introduced Rocco Scotti, a Cleveland who sings — poorly, by comparison with, say, Robert Merrill — the national anthem at sporting events.

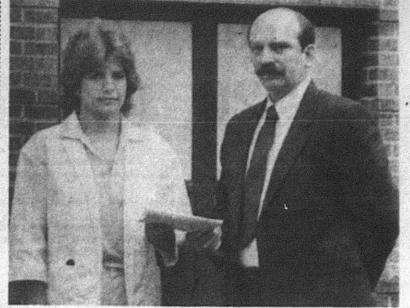

As Scotti began to sing, with the spectators on their feet in a more or less respectful mien, the camera panned on the champion. He was vigorously punching an imaginary opponent, warming himself up for the bout that was to come.

"Lookit that bastid," said the disabled veteran. "I hope that parking nigger knocks the s-t-out of 'im. Why can't he stand at attention like the rest of 'em?" It was a rhetorical question, certainly one that nobody present chose to answer.

It is a fact that, after 13 rounds, and into the 14th, the black had indeed done what the disabled veteran wished for the champion.

What his neighbor couldn't figure out, then or now, is this: Is it enough to pay obeisance, to go through the motions, if you don't believe in what the obeisance, the motions, stand for?

They can be very scary things for high school and even college students.

All of a sudden you realize that you are no longer a school kid, but out on your own.

It takes real courage to have to face that little fact. I know. It once happened to me. There I was way back then clutching black folder-like thing that said I was a legitimate graduate of the University of Minnesota. I wasn't too bad in school, my grades were right up there, but it was a different story when I looked for a teaching job.

At that time the country was coming out of the Great Depression and World War II had started.

Teaching was out. No school district would look at you unless you had a couple years of experience. I was a great "practice teacher" and actually got praised for what I did with a bunch of miserable eighth graders who were real disciplinary problems but downright bright. Because they were so bad, they got put in one class and I got them, one hour a day for five weeks.

I did everything wrong according to the book right off the bat. Teachers are really not to yell at kids. One yelled at me, which I knew was a testing deal worked out, and I simply yelled back louder. From then on those kids started to learn what they had to know.

So the next thing I tried and was qualified for was social studies. There were two of us for a job. She got it, not me. I asked why and the answer was that even though my qualifications on paper were much better, I had not really lived. I was 21 and not married.

The other gal was 23 and married. So here I was, simply unemployable for what I spent years in training. I simply went out and found a really nice job that really didn't require anything except being nice to people.

So what is education? It is simply knowing things that have happened partly in the past, which can make your life more enjoyable. We do not live in a small world anymore. Once Richard Nixon went to China, I am willing to bet that was the first time that millions ever knew their Great Wall existed. Now they do, because everyone gets his picture taken on it.

If it wasn't for education, how could any of us read a cookbook? Admittedly some are cooking for many years ago when someone gave me a recipe with only what went in it for a cake, thinking I would know how to put it together, and I didn't . . . you know, the moist stuff first, then the dry. I just mixed it all up and it did work.

It also works like a dream. It is a baked fondue.

Butter two round cake pans. Then butter 16 slices of good, sturdy white bread, trim the crusts off and slice each piece in one inch strips.

Cut Swiss cheese slices in quarter inch strips.

Place a layer of bread, buttered side up in each pan, then a layer of cheese, more bread, more cheese and end with a layer of bread.

Have ready four beaten eggs mixed with three cups of light cream, seasoned with ground pepper and some salt.

Pour this over the bread and cheese, bake at 375 degrees until puffy and golden. It will cut into wedges, and the recipe can be cut in half if two pans are too much.

Pool sold to village for $10,000 and current indebtedness was $83,000 — directors sought a way out. The offer to buy was "ridiculously low, but who is also there to bid", one director said.

The pool is now municipally owned and will be operated on fees paid by the bathers and by season ticket sales and/or donations. A concession stand will produce some profits, which will accrue to the village.

"I suppose the village will have to get some money from somewhere", says one councilman who wishes not to be identified, "and I suspect that rather than a separate operating levy, that might be defeated, the same way the police levy was beaten, what will happen is that Peter will be robbed to pay Paul and the two will be stolen blind to pay Mary."

First priority good restaurant, survey shows

Although only a handful responded to the questionnaires distributed by the village planning committee, the message was loud and clear.

The committee passed out 300 to consumers, of whom 53 responded, and 57 to businesses, with 14 responses.

In answer to what the village needs, foremost were a good family restaurant and a better variety of merchandise.

Parking and the traffic pattern also came in for criticism. One comment was made that parking is a problem only at certain hours and on certain days. Another objection was that persons parking in the north side of the Square wishing to drive south must go around the block to be headed in the right direction.

"Clean-up of the Square and do needed street repair" was also a prominent item.

Planting of flowers and trees in the Square is also desired.

Douglas A. Dickson, a member of the committee, said he hopes Plymouth can be a part of the national historical preservation of buildings.

Mayor Dean A. Cline suggested it would be a good idea to have a trained person such as an architect give advice of just how the buildings around the Square could be spruced up.

Some said the two bars are a deterrent to the appearance of the Square and should be relocated.

Miss Luella Vandervort, a member of the committee, said benches should be distributed on the sidewalks. This was in keeping with the general comment on the questionnaires by respondents who said they like the small town atmosphere and friendliness.

Another item on the questionnaires was that most said they shop in the village at least weekly, but they also prefer shopping malls and discount stores for selection and prices.

Twice as many women answered the questionnaire, and the age bracket of 31 to 40 had the most responses.

For the most part annual income was from $20,000 to $25,000, and 12 said theirs exceeded $30,000.

Dickson told the committee he plans to do a follow-up on the questionnaire by better pinpointing some of the questions.
