

Mrs. Eckstein, 74, dies suddenly

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday for Mrs. Royal W. Eckstein, Sr., 74, who died Saturday in Bellevue hospital after a short illness.

Born Ethel Bising June 2, 1912, in Galion, she spent her adult life in Plymouth.

She and her late husband, who served several terms as a village councilman, ran Eckstein's Plymouth Hardware. After his death in 1969, the business was sold to Charles Ness, who ran it until he retired about 10 years ago.

For the past 10 years she has been associated with her son Everett, in Plymouth Antiques, which they ran from their over 100-year-old home at 183 Plymouth street.

Mrs. Eckstein was a graduate of

Cutright: 'A' is murderer

Defendant stoutly refuses to further identify killer

A bizarre story about his involvement in the slaying of Jeffrey Clancy on the night of Sept. 21 last unfolded from the witness box in Richland county common pleas court Tuesday as K. Charles Cutright took the stand in his own defense.

Hearst he didn't kill Clancy. He said he knows who did kill the early drug dealer who lived in Route 224 east of New Haven.

But he steadfastly refused to identify him, nor his accomplice, who according to Cutright assisted in clearing up the murder scene and in transporting the pickup truck belonging to Clancy's father first to New Haven and thence to Willoughby, after which it was set fire in the parking lot of a Mentor drinking place.

After he told his story, he fought off rigorous cross examination by Jerry Ault, the persomable assistant prosecutor who until this point was a timid tabby. He has another side, the pouncing puma, which he showed during his assault on Cutright's contention that he did not kill Clancy.

After repeated refusals by Cutright to make the names of "A," the murderer, or "B," the accomplice, Ault asked Judge James D. Henson to order the witness to testify.

After a recess, the jurist did so. He pointed out to the accused that he has rights under the 5th Amendment to the Constitution that preclude his being compelled to testify against himself. But there is no right, Judge Henson said, to refuse to testify to the alleged crimes of others.

Right, Cutright through the sordid details of his failed marriage of seven years to Mona Lawrence, by whom he has a son, William Jack Cutright, and to his liaison with Donita Buchanan, who delivered another son, Joshua Charles Cutright, and his bouts with drugs.

To the question of whether he owed Clancy money for drugs, Cutright answered that he never owed more than $200 for cocaine, and he paid his bills more or less on time because he was paid in cash every day he sold drugs.

Specifically, on Sept. 21, he owed "about $100 but there was a situation involving Jackie and me, it amounted to $275 and we were

Buy in or get out, PLW employees told; will 100 do so?

It's almost down to the bottom line.

The questions now are how much and whether how much does an employee of Plymouth Locomotive Works, Inc., have to put up to hold his job and whether enough of the present staff of about 100 employees can or will do so to make the EDOP (employee stock ownership plan), which requires 10 per cent of the pivot price participation by the buyers (the employees), manageable by the purchasers.

Additionally, they have been told by Samuel J. Krasney, who built Banner Industries Inc., the parent firm, to what it became before he sold out for about $15 million personally to Jeffrey Steiner and investors over a year ago, that satisfactory management must be assured to the seller or the seller won't go forward.

Nevertheless, a letter of intent to sell to the employees has been issued by Banner Industries.

This means Banner is committed to sell to the employees before any other consideration.

David A. Howard, a Shelby attorney who is part of the negotiating team for the buyers, said Thursday he thinks "support by the employees of this plan is growing" but he gave no numbers.

A reporter seeking an appraisal of how many would participate got two answers: "I can't be sure until I know how much, and then it would be easier for me if you'd tell me where in hell I'd find the money" and "There'll be a lot of people who will hang on as long as they can and then, if they have to go, they'll go, because they can't or won't put up the money. We've been told that unless you but in, you're out. Those with experience who don't buy in might be hired back, if they need them down the road, but probably at less money."

The buyout group has no firm commitments from any private lenders, only verbal assurances that "if all goes as planned, the money probably will be available." A great deal hangs on the willingness and ability of state funding agencies to come forward with money. Richland county commissioners have already gone to their revolving fund to put up some money in an effort to retain about 110 jobs in the county.

Red rally produces win over Trojans, 63-59

Coach David P. Dunn hopes to fund his Christmas giving by sale of the stuff of which champions are made.

Not all of it. Just enough to pay for his gift lists.

His Plymouth team put enough of what stuff on the line at Greenwich Saturday night to manage a 10-point run with time expiring in a game in which it had been outshot, outjumped, outpassed and outclassed for just over 29 minutes.

And then it began to move.

When the clock had crested the Big Red had defeated South Central, 63-59, in a key Firelands conference struggle that, among other achievements, produced for Plymouth the first undefeated league schedule before the new year in the modern history of the game here.

The Trojans led by five at 56 to 51 on a jumper by Craig Conaway until, at 2:24 Ron Stephens fired shot through the hoop. He drew a foul by Fishbaugh, his fifth, and went to the line for two free throws, each of which he converted.

Co-Capt. Steve Hall banged one from 20 feet away, to cut the lead to one at 56 to 55 and at 1:24 drew a foul by Conaway.

Hall strode to the line and made the first penalty shot. This tied the score at 56. Then he duplicated the performance. Plymouth had a lead it would never give up.

The Big Red took a time out at 57. Eighteen seconds later Stephens fired one home from underneath and with an advantage of three, Plymouth asked for time out again.

There were 36 seconds remaining.

Randy Fishbaugh, certainly the top opponent Plymouth has faced in conference play so far, fouled Hall at :31 and he canned both shots.

Lance Combs unbounded the ball and Plymouth worked it to Stephens in the lane under the basket. He was fouled. The Big Red led five and had it tied up with five seconds remaining.

That Davy Ronk was accorded two free throws as the horn blew made no difference. He made one of them.

If there was any doubt that Hall is the best player in the conference, all of Greenwich now so believes. He scored 26 points on what was obviously an off night. He did not make a point in the first period. He did not score a shot until the clock read 3:17 of the final quarter. His first score was a free throw at :31 of the second period.

Hall scored 12 in the second quarter, four in the third and eight in the final one. Six of these were important free throws.

Until the 2:30 mark of the fourth period, the Big Red's play was ragged.

It had to that point committed 20 turnovers in the first period.

Overall, the Big Red connected with 23 of 58 tries for field goal and 17 of 21 free throws. It rebounded 23 times, nine of them in the second half.

Its defense came alive in the final period. It limited the Trojans to nine shots at the basket and forced eight turnovers. South Central scored only eight points in the final minutes.

In total, the Trojans fired 54 times, and succeeded with 24 of them. They missed eight of their 21 free throws. Made 28 mistakes on offense and rebounded 36 times, only 20 of them in the second half.

Randy Fishbaugh scored the next 24. He is a fine player.

Stephens, rapidly becoming what Dunn hoped he would be contributed 13, including five of seven free throws.

Western Reserve reserves won easily, 43 to 19.

Plymouth delivers 24th loss to 'Riders

Big Red stormed over Western Reserve here Friday night, 83 to 63, by straight shooting, a clawing defense and a cohesive team play that has so far been unusual for Plymouth.

It was the 25th straight defeat for the 'Riders. They last won over Dunbar in the opening game of the 1985-86 season.

The 'Riders gave Plymouth fits in the first period, with seven successes in 16 tries. But they erred on offense eight times. Ron Shepherd, steadily coming into his own as the big middle man, kept Plymouth in competition with eight points, three-for-three from the field and two free throws. And Mike Lasch, heralded here if nowhere else as a pure shooter, knocked three of four shots for six. Plymouth led by two after eight minutes.

The Big Red broke it up in the second quarter. Having had a run of seven in the first quarter, Plymouth ran nine at the start of the second period and closed it out with a run of 12. Co-Capt. Steve Hall got 10 of his game-high 18 in these first eight minutes.

Plymouth was 10-for-25, five of nine from the line, and closed the half with 17 rebounds and only eight mistakes on offense. Closely, Western Reserve, with just 23 points on the scoreboard, had errred 19 times on offense and rebounded 19 shots.

The Big Red needs to rebound more effectively to maintain this pace.

The teams played just about even in the first half, mostly because Chad Fairchild, the most dependable 10th grader, shot this period in his first year, ignited for 12 points in the third period with five-of-seven from the field and two of free tosses. Lance Combs kept Plymouth competitive with a perfect four-of-four from the field and a free throw.

Going into the final eight minutes, Coach David P. Dunn showed his class. He sent second line players onto the floor, including a ninth grader, Tony Haymond, who repaid the confidence with five points. He then sent his reserves into the game, having picked up remarkably.

Co-Capt. Jason Robinson, with five free throws in the second period of seven tries, finished with 13.

Two precincts but seldom heard from in the past run up 11 points apiece. Their names are Combs and Stephens.

Fairchild continued his assault on the basket in the fourth period. Until he fouled out with less than a minute left, he kept the 'Riders all but respectable. He concluded his sterling efforts with 12 of 20 shots successful, nine of 14 in the last half, and 26 points all told.

This provocative piece, published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer on Nov. 10, presents a new slant on an old subject. Every local board of education needs to engage in self-examination: how much progress in our school have we generated, progress that wasn't forced on us by the county, the state or the federal government?

ESSAY & COMMENT

WASHINGTON

The darkest island of American governance may be the local school board. Why do we need it? With the states involved in an unprecedented wave of school reforms, are the local boards facilitators or路ies of change?

There's no shortage of school boards to look at: 15,000 of them spread across the continent, with 97,000 elected members. But rarely does anyone subject them to a tough national look.

Now comes the first big school boards study in memory. Based on a comprehensive review of school boards and what communities have to say about them, the study is the work of the Institute for Educational Leadership (IEL), a Washington-based research group, and was funded by the American Can Foundation.

Two fascinating but contradictory conclusions emerge:

Americans instinctively embrace the idea of school boards; expect they'll be a bulwark of lay responsibility for the community's schools, an institution that "a free democratic society can't be without." And some school districts — those in Pittsburgh and Columbus, for example — approach the ideal.

But ask many Americans about their own town's school board, and enthusiasm tends to ebb like a punctured balloon. The IEL found "deep public apathy and indifference" about school boards, "abysmally low" turnouts for school board elections and massive ignorance. Most school boards are largely invisible to the community at large.

School boards in political scrap

In easier times, this mismatch — revering an ideal, ignoring it in practice — might make little difference. But this is the 1980s, a decade of agonizing reexamination of public education. For fear that this nation will be no match for lean and hungry competitors on the world economic stage.

Since the 1983 "Nation at Risk" report on deficiencies in U.S. education, state governments, usually in partnership with business, have instituted a historic wave of school reforms seeking to toughen curriculum standards, increase teacher rewards and strengthen teacher corps. If school boards had been on the ball, they'd have led early on these fronts. Scarcely any did.

Todays governors simply can't ignore education. Schools, far and away, are the biggest item on state budgets; education levels will drive future economic growth. So boards, the IEL reports, resent the new state controls and mandates. But states must face their own unpleasant reality: Foot-dragging school boards could frustrate a major portion of the state-ordered reforms.

The school boards of the '80s and '90s may be standing on political quicksand. Still, enrollment is increasing, black and Hispanic by 1991, 25% of U.S. public-school pupils will be from minority groups; half will come from single-parent homes. Minority politicians, especially in larger cities, are gaining more and more school-board seats, displacing old white "establishment" figures.

Yet as this IEL report underscores, school boards are too often isolated from local government and mainstream political administration. They rarely have formal ways to communicate with business leadership. The school superintendents, if anyone, do that.

Will an increasingly old, overwhelmingly white voting public support increasingly minority schools? Conversely, how can city or county governments map out an economic development plan for the 21st century, when the most important "future" agenda item, education, is under legal control of independent duhies called school boards?

The IEL report outlines all sorts of "good practices" to make school boards function better, such as training, orientation courses and independent evaluations.

But a smart school board would think a lot further. Even though many boards have independent tax bases, they'd do well to consider periodic independence — maybe a year or two a year — with local mayors and city or county councils. The goal would be to work on common agendas, but just as importantly, to start dealing the board into the mainstream political power structure.

One myth purveyed by progressive reformers of the early 20th century was that local school could be "removed" from community control. But politics decides the priorities of a society, its allocation of resources.

School boards can't escape severe tests. So poor is the level of performance in many school districts today that the National Governors Association in August recommended that states set up clear performance standards and decide if districts are "bankrupt" and put them into some form of state "receivership." The jolt — or its threat — might force somemore or quarrelsome boards to clean up their act.

The education establishment trembled at the "receivership" idea: National School Boards Association chairman John Shannon called it "Draconian," "unworkable" and open to political abuse. But Shannon's proposed "cure" — ballot-box retaliation against delinquent boards — is demonstrably unworkable when few citizens turn out for board elections.

Perhaps it's unrealistic to expect today's citizens to master names and issues in elections for more than their own city or county council. Perhaps school boards are an idea whose time has come and gone.

At a minimum, the time is more than ripe for increased experimentation. School vouchers, for example. Brookings Institution scholars John Chubb and Terry Moe say that schools become victims of bureaucracies that routinize and regulate instead of encouraging school-level autonomy and collegiality of teachers that provide a lively setting for learning. Chubb and Moe would substitute a free market in education — essentially independent schools among which parents could choose.

A heretical idea in "democratic" America? Perhaps. But even the governors association now suggests giving parents choice, breaking up the educators' full monopoly by letting parents pick the public school for their kids to attend. And by permitting high school students to take courses at public colleges during their junior and senior years. That's now law in Minnesota over heated opposition of the public school establishment.

Rare is the school board that even today is inclined to change. But the whirling of change has just started. The nation's schools are being thrust on a roller coaster of experimentation. Not because education establishments choose it, but because the state governments, and their business allies, have the clout to make it happen.

The question is: Will the traditional school boards be able to keep their seats as the velocity builds?

SOME OF THE GREATEST THINGS IN AMERICA NEVER CHANGE.

SOME DO.

U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying 10.94%.

U.S. Savings Bonds now pay like money market accounts! At the current rate—10.94%—you could double your money in less than seven years. Just hold Bonds for five years and you get the new higher variable rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. Savings Bonds are still as safe as ever. They're still exempt from state and local income taxes. And since Bonds cost as little as $25, they're as affordable as ever. What's more, Bonds remain a great way to keep our country strong.

You can purchase Bonds almost anywhere. At neighborhood banks, savings and loans and credit unions. Or easier still, right through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.

For your free booklet, write: "50 Q&A," U.S. Savings Bonds Division, Washington, D.C. 20226. Paying Better Than Ever.

"Then I learned that in towns and cities across America, Red Cross gives the kind of help to individuals that you rarely hear about, because it doesn't make headlines in the newspaper."

"Red Cross, for instance, helps elderly people get to doctors' appointments... and even to the store. They help veterans get back on the track. They teach kids to swim... and how to save lives."

"I found out that if you added up all the different humanitarian jobs Red Cross does in different towns, the number comes to over 100!"

Sister's testimony effective in trial of Cutright than not with a male companion, in a car, travel to the edge of town and habitually used drugs, and the day of the murder.

She testified that she was in the habit of using cocaine every other weekend, at first, and then every weekend, that she used it only by injection, and that her brother, the accused, wielded the needle each and every time.

Charles Cutright, his sister testified, did not use drugs until he was graduated from high school, then began by using marijuana. He "mainlined" cocaine and used marijuana and LSD, she said.

His cocaine use was by injection and by "snorting", a forceful inhalation through a narrow tube of cocaine in powder form into the nasal cavity in the nose.

As for alcohol, she began drinking when she was 13, she said. She drank with her brother while both were in high school. Prior to the death of Bambi Clones she had been very tipsy and had drunk about three times a week. Since the murder, she swore, she has gotten drunk almost every day until the day after Thanksgiving, when she attempted suicide by taking too much Talwin, a powerful depressant.

She confessed on the witness stand that she dealt in drugs, that she would get one-fourth of an ounce of cocaine at a cost of $500 and break it down into one-eighth and three-fourths of a gram apiece, which she sold for $25 each. One-fourth of an ounce of cocaine will make, she said, two "eighthalls." After she weighed out the cocaine in parcels of three-fourths of a gram apiece, there was some left over, which she used and shared with her brother. When this was gone, she sold cocaine to her brother.

She testified that she began to have trouble with Chuck after the coke was gone.

Bambi Clones "mainlined" coke to her — which means he allowed her to take it on credit and a promise to pay him later on — and the last time she bought cocaine from Clones was in the amount of a fourth of an ounce on Sept. 17, at $550.

At this point, Chuck Cutright owed his sister $175 for seven "lids" or doses of cocaine of one-fourth gram apiece.

She divined the final purchase in two parts and had one "eighthall" in her credit. One person to know of this transaction and where she was wont to hide it was her brother, Miss Cutright said.

When she came back to get this "eighthall," on Sept. 19, she said, she noted that it had been "Hit," which means disturbed, taken from.

She summoned two friends, who commonly came to her apartment at 42 Sandusky street to use drugs, Glenn Taylor and Harvey Robinson, 3rd, to taste the cocaine to determine if it had been tampered with.

They agreed this was the case.

She confronted her brother.

In indignation, she said, he denied he had diluted the "eighthall". If I thought he would do something like that, he said, he wouldn't want to have anything to do with me and he would give me back the key to my apartment," Miss Cutright testified.

Danny Montgomery, with whom, she admitted, she had now begun to live, was called to look for her weapon, which she claimed she had bought from Charles Cutright about two and a half or three months before that time, a cal. 25 Raven semi-automatic pistol, for self-protection purposes.

It came with no bullets, Harvey

Robinson, 3rd, bought some rounds for the gun but they proved to be the wrong size. So he supplied his illicit drugs, Arthur volunteered to pick up the right ammunition on a trip to the right army base.

When Montgomery tasted it, "he didn't say anything, he just made a face, as if to say it was bad because it was diluted."

Chuck Cutright dissolved the remainder in water and "shot it up". He injected the witness as well.

He kept telling me he wasn't getting off on it," she said.

There were remaining, she said,

11 or 12 parcels of one-fourth of a gram of cocaine apiece. How was she going to pay for it, her brother not having come up with money? She determined to assemble the lot and return it to Clones, which she concluded on Sept. 20. Clones told her he would "forget about one 'eighthall' but wanted to be paid for the other."

She told her brother of her arrangement with Clones, clued him for failing to keep his promise to pay her, either in cash or kind, for what he has gotten, and said Bambi expected to be paid for the coke.

He said he didn't know how he would do it but he would see to it that Clones was paid. She testified he owes Clones $100 in an earlier drug deal.

Miss Cutright saw her brother in front of Weber's on Sept. 21, when he was wearing the black leather jacket.

She testified that Patty Payne knew that Cutright owned Clones' money and when she spoke with her brother, "he wouldn't look at me, he had his hands in his pockets and seemed upset."

On Sept. 22, the witness swore, she went to her brother at his apartment to find out what had happened between him and Clones the night before. His lover, Miss Payne, said he had left early.

Miss Cutright went for an interview with the Huron County Welfare department, and at noon learned a body that probably was that of Clones had been found outside the village.

Miss Cutright went for an interview with the Huron County Welfare department, and at noon this was so. He laughed, she said, and replied, "Jim probably hates me because I left my bike at his place."

Arnold was trying to "set him up," Cutright told his sister, to which he retorted she well knew Arnold was not involved and her brother responded, "You're right, but that's the story."

On Sept. 23, she testified, he asked him if he killed Bambi. He said, "Don't ask me that!" I asked him where the gun was. He said "They'll never find it!"

Whitney's cross-examination was painstakingly polite. He laid stress on her involvement with drugs in Missouri.

She told him her ex-husband, Buddy Tassorio, (with whom she identified him other than by ex-husband), came to her and said "If something ever happens to you I don't want the cops coming to me." From this she inferred she ought to have a personal gun and for that reason she bought one.

The prosecution had one more witness, Terry Prater, step-brother (he was called half-brother in the courtroom) of the accused.

His testimony was perfunctory, mostly confirming what had already been said.

Whitney continued his defense by calling Tassorio, who testified briefly about the sale of the gun. Tassorio lives above a garage in an apartment built by Dan Grabach two generations ago. He is the personalization of what Hollywood conceives the empathizer of drug traffic to be like long stringy black hair, a full mustache, a heavy black beard, affecting dark blue sun glasses that he never took off, blue jeans and a black leather motorcycle jacket.

Then he called Lieut. Joseph Docherty, who has earlier testified for the state.

His testimony was no more revelatory than that of Tassorio.

At this point a recess was called.

Whitney and his client went into close consultation, after the accused had told The Advertiser privately that he wasn't sure if he would take the witness stand.

In Presbyterian ceremony —

Kelly Wilson wed to G. Hockenberry

Miss Kelly Anne Wilson became the bride of Grant Todd Hockenberry Saturday in a candlelight 7 p.m. service in First United Presbyterian church.

She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Wilson.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Hockenberry and the grandson of Mrs. Charles Hockenberry and his late mother, the Thomas Rishes, at law in Plymouth.

On Christmas day the Kenneth R. Echelbergs and their son, Robert Echelberry, will be guests of their daughter and son-in-law, the Duane Keenes.

Rick Collins and Randy Broderick, Shelby, ushered.

The bride chose a jade green which was admitted as an exhibit in the trial, to be disclosed in open testimony.

What Cutright offered from the witness box on Tuesday was the alibi defense that is considered in legal circles to be the appropriate ploy when accused of a crime. If the accused can show that he was otherwise occupied, or present elsewhere, at the time of the crime, it is usually a substantial defense and often acquittal.

One of the press' best said, "Holding him an alibi and b in it, and two I's, and they're both blind."

It was his way of saying perhaps Cutright would have been better advised, whether by his attorney or by his conscience, to remain silent and to rely on the jury to weigh evidence that is wholly circumstantial and consider if it wished to convict an accused on such testimony and deduction.

The jury was charged after final arguments Tuesday and it began deliberations yesterday morn....

They are living in Shelby.

How to influence an 18-year-old.

A public service message of this publication

MUSIC. Discuss current trends with your son as his stereo blasts away at full power. Drop the following names: "The Boss," New Edition, Rush. The rest of the time just mumble.

SPORTS CAR. So what if he can't pronounce Porsche? Give in and buy him a sports car. That will get his attention.

SPORTS. Gain his undying love by repairing the garage basketball backboard and adding overhead lighting for night games.

NEW THREADS. You've heard of "Dress for Success?" Well, today it's "Dress to Excess." Close your eyes and buy him a new wardrobe.

POST OFFICE. The post office isn't really an influence, it's a destination—within a month of every male's 18th birthday. Here he must register with Selective Service. However, some young men put off registering, and a few decide not to register at all. That's why we're making this direct appeal to you. We need you to help influence your son to register—and to do so on time. You see, registration is the law. In addition to prosecution, non-registration could mean your son is disqualifying himself for federal student loans, federal employment and job training benefits. Don't let a young man you know miss out on any federal or state benefits. Make sure he knows about registering with Selective Service. A complete registration list saves our country six vital weeks in mobilizing our manpower in a national emergency.
