

Get on the stick!

It would be obscene to suggest that the mundane, day-to-day matters of the county should take precedence over the most careful attention to the constitutional rights of a citizen who stands accused of murder and could, perhaps, pay for it with his life, if he is found guilty.

And we do not suggest for one minute that this should occur.

But there are others, in addition to our young neighbor, who thirst for justice, if that indeed is what is dispensed in our courts of law, and their wants and needs and yearnings ought to be heeded and attended to.

It is a fact that whatever litigation that seized the common pleas court prior to the current unpleasantness is simply not moving. That some litigants may suffer, perhaps monetarily, certainly emotionally, because their complaints cannot be heard promptly (and, in a good many instances, they have waited a long time, as it is) goes without saying. Are they entitled to recompense? Perhaps. We are unlikely to see the day, not in this century or the next, that a litigant will obtain relief because the jurist en banc was dilatory, didn't attend to business, or failed to perform for other than physical disability.

Earlier on, there was legislation that, if approved, would have provided for a second common pleas judge. The argument then was that the docket was so clogged, the backlog of cases so mountainous, that no civilized jurist could reasonably expect to deal with them in a practical amount of time.

The legislation failed. For a number of reasons, not the least of which was that the county — or at least those in it chosen to manage its finances — doesn't think the advantage is worth the expense.

We have undertaken to determine to what extent litigants in the common pleas court may be damaged by its inability to deal with their suits because it is seized of the capital case.

It will not be easy, we acknowledge that fact from the start. Already some friends of the bar have said, "Man, you're going to run into a lot of horseback estimates by lawyers who want to boil the judge in oil. And there are others who will want to make their clients think the case is a lot more important than it really is. When you get these data what're they going to show? Just what we know already — that it's a pain in the neck (he didn't say neck) to have this delay and we ought to have some apparatus to relieve the pressure when it mounts up like this."

A look into the Revised Code shows there is such an apparatus.

It's not free.

The county would have to pay for it.

Pay for what?

A visiting judge, whether he be assigned to the capital case to allow the sitting judge to get on with what he has done so well in the past or to substitute for him in dealing with these matters while he presides over the capital trial.

The visiting judge will cost money.

The word from the courthouse is that the Young trial may go on for as many as eight weeks. Testimony has only begun. The protagonists, defense attorneys Levin and assistant prosecutor Holman, have been going at it like Tunney and Dempsey, or for the younger among us, Hagler and Hearn (but certainly not Spinks and Holmes: any married couple can put on a better fight than those two clowns). It is likely that eight weeks may be a conservative estimate.

What do we owe the litigant?

We, and that means all of us in the county, owe him a reasonably prompt disposal of the contentious matter he has brought before the court. The key word is "reasonably." From our standpoint, considering that anyone whose case has risen to the top of the docket has already waited an inordinately long time, by comparison with what's current in neighboring counties, it is proper that some positive step be taken now to alleviate the suffering. Get another judge in here now.

Court seized of murder case — Council orders action to enjoin water hike

An injunction will be sought in Huron county common pleas court against the City of Willard so that an accurate water rate can be village council formally ruled June 10.

During the talks in the last two months, Mayor Keith A. Hebble suggested that an "outsider," notably an accountant, be brought in to go over the figures for the proposed rate increase to determine what is accurate.

Neither Paul Capelle, Willard's city manager, nor the two members of Willard's water committee, Jack Fryman and Roderick Shingler, liked the idea and said they do not feel it is necessary.

Hebble and the village council think having the court determine a rate will be best all the way around.

In other action at the June 10 meeting, Lester Shields, who requested that he be allowed to burn off brush on several acres he owns within the village, was told he must seek approval through the fire chief.

James C. Root, village administrator, told the council the sewer lagoons are badly in need of dredging.

He said they have not been cleaned since they were installed about 20 years ago. It will be a costly undertaking, he said, and hinted at a sewer rate increase.

Also, the interceptor sewer line needs to be cleaned. It was cleaned about 10 years ago when the complete sanitary system was installed.

Approval was given to a resolution from the Consumer council that Plymouth will be part of a coalition of municipalities asking that Columbus set a standard rate for all its users.

The council asked the solicitor what liability problems it could face with only one ambulance in use and one ambulance sitting stripped. Richard Wolfe, 2nd, replied that at the moment he could not give a clear-cut opinion.

Councilman Bill Talbue said the problem was an "in-service" ambulance. He did not feel the village could force the issue when the fire chief and members of the squad say it is unsafe to drive.

Mrs. Finnegan succumbs at 58 to lengthy illness

Mrs. Desmond Finnegan, 58, London East road, whose children are products of Plymouth High school, died June 10 at her home of a lengthy illness.

She married June 10, 1950. Her husband survives. So do four sons, Roger, Troy, Plymouth; Kevin, U. S. Navy, and Douglas, at home; a daughter, Colleen, at home; a brother, Eugene (Dean) Hollenbaugh, a sister, Loux, now Mrs. Peter Stuckey, Shelby; two half-brothers, Leroy Hollenbaugh, in California, and Frank Hollenbaugh, Shelby, and seven grand-children survive. A son Terry M. died in a motorcycle collision. A brother, Warren (Duke) Hollenbaugh, also died earlier.

4th of July unaltered, thank God!

By AUNT LIZ

So far no one has changed it. But give some of those clowns in Washington a little more time and they will.

July 4 is still on July 4, not the second, third or even sixth.

This year it is on a Friday, so all is well with the world, a nice, happy weekend.

Over the years we have all watched some long time holiday dates under change.

It makes me wonder if Americans really care about their long fought for traditions that seem to interfere with today's life style.

And how many of our school kids today can belt out "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy"? Granted the one version I learned was George M. Cohan's, which Jimmy Cagney made really famous in an old movie.

And how many of us even realize that little song has been around since the time July 4 was the big day in the life of the colonists?

It somehow came into being during the Revolutionary war and was plain political and even nasty about how England was behaving.

L. A. Brooks wed at Crestline

Pvt. Larry Andrew Brooks, USMC, took Miss Margo Lee Strawbridge, Crestline, as his bride in Walnut Brethren church there June 6 at 7:30 p.m. in a double ring ceremony performed by the minister, the Rev. Timothy Garner.

Given in marriage by her grandfather, Lester J. Henz, the bride was attired in a long gown of satin and lace with short train. It was styled with fitted bodice trimmed with pearls and high scalloped neckline. She carried lavender and pink silk roses on a Bible.

Miranda Perry, Crestline, flower girl, wore ivory taffeta of flower length, styled with ruffled shoulders, fitted bodice and pink sash. Michelle Brooks, Plymouth, the bridegroom's nephew, was ring bearer.

The bridegroom chose his father, Donald L. Brooks, Sr., as best man and his brother-in-law, Mr. Lewis; a brother, D. Lee Brooks, Jr., Plymouth; Jon Strine, Plymouth, and James Will, Plymouth, as ushers.

Mrs. Strawbridge and the bridegroom's mother were identically attired in street-length gowns of ivory taffeta with net overskirt.

Wheat growers urged to vote No on controls

Here are five reasons why the U.S. wheat grower group can't idler their way to prosperity: Australia, Argentina, The European Community, Canada and China. If mandatory production controls on wheat are approved, the above are ready to increase production to fill the world's needs.

If the U.S. sets wheat prices up in the sky, we can forget exports. Think about how few acres will be needed to produce wheat for our domestic needs.

What will be planted on idled acres? Probably other crops that we already have to much of, this in turn will bring out the call for production controls till we have lost our freedom to farm.

The ASCS office will mail wheat poll ballots only to wheat producers of record. If you don't have a wheat base and you have produced wheat in all or part of years 81-85, we urge you to take your wheat records to your county ASCS office to become eligible to vote.

Failure to vote in this wheat poll will result in a vote at all The Ballot (DRAFT) will have some size wheat grower voting, over 40 acres and under will probably be counted separately.

The Richland County Farm Bureau board of trustees voted at our June 9 meeting to urge you to vote NO on mandatory production controls for wheat.

Sincerely,
Tom Swarts, president
Richland County Farm Bureau

Questions:

Why The Advertiser does, or does not, asked and answered

(Ed. Note) The following is excerpted from a personal communication to the editor. He thinks its general tenor is suitable grist for the public mill. The inditer thinks so also, but not with his name. He says he fears "repercussions to my family, and they couldn't stand that." This seems to be sufficient reason to withhold his name.

"I don't get back to Plymouth that often, but I can comment with absolute authority about what's going on.

"I was at home for commencement (I thought the speaker was very good and I visited with my family. I looked you up but I couldn't find you, although I did see your wife pass in her car.

"These facts stated, and having saved all of my money, The Advertiser since about the first of the year (even though I've been away for a long time, it's far better than a letter from home, I want you to know that), I have some questions to ask you and will appreciate your answers when you get time.

"The newspaper has small areas of free to fill before it goes to press. I think the items that fill these spaces are called 'fillers.' As long as I've read The Advertiser, these fillers have said 'The Advertiser,' and I don't blame you; anybody who doesn't simply can't know what's going on, and 'Always Shop At Home First,' which I don't understand. Shop where? For what? I was in town only two days and part of a third. I accompanied my folks on three shopping trips. They told me they only buy certain things in Plymouth; other things are too expensive. Too expensive by comparison with what I asked them. With Willard, Shelby, and Manassah and the Mall, they said I can testify that, in the case of all items but three that my folks bought on commencement weekend, Plymouth prices are higher.

"Every time I see the quality of Plymouth's products was no better and, in one place, couldn't be compared because they were 'fresh out.' The 'fresh out' thing has been 'fresh out' of that item for over a year." You must know these facts.

Why do you keep urging your readers to "Always Shop At Home First"? Are you being fair to them?

2. One or two times, mostly in your editorials (to tell you the truth, sometimes I read them) you tell them they always and I mean always, get a cheer, you refer to the large number of houses for sale. On my visit, my folks pointed out a great many of these houses that were being sold. The Advertiser hasn't published a piece, or two, or three, about why real estate in Plymouth is on the market, or how it got there, or what before it sells, why it hasn't sold or isn't selling, why, according to some realtors, "people don't want to buy in Plymouth?"

3. At a graduation party, one person said to me, "When I grew up, I never thought I would one day have something to do with Plymouth. I never thought I would have to pay the utility bill and the electric bill and the water bill and the phone bill and the alcoholics." Is this the reputation of our town? Surely you must have heard this, or something like it. Why hasn't The Advertiser printed something about this if it's true, if so, why, what do Plymouth's neighbors think of it and why?

4. Also at a graduation party I heard, "We can't afford to live in Plymouth" or something like this two or three times. I asked why. "We can't find a decent house for what we can pay, the utilities are out of sight, the prices in the stores, what few there are, are so high we can't pay them. So we live where we can walk down the street and get what we want for what we can't afford, the schools are just as good, maybe better, and there more to do." (This, I submit, is not one answer, but two or three answers put together.)

Why hasn't The Advertiser printed something about this?

5. The new library is the best thing since sliced bread. The lady who gave it ought to get a medal. What is being done to use it more? Why is it closed on Saturday, when kids in the school are free to go there? Why haven't you, personally, or the newspaper organized some kind of community forum to look at that absolutely great assembly room in the library buy one or two nights a week? Aren't there enough topics to discuss? Would you like to suggest some?

6. The museum, which I saw only part of, with my nose pushed against the glass, is a plus. My mother and a plus, my folks said. I asked why. "There's not much in it, and what's there isn't very interesting to a lot of people," she said. Is this true? My folks also said Plymouth is being promoted as a stopping place between Ohio's Switzerland (is that right?) and the lake. Is this a joke?

7. Also at a graduation party, I heard from several young people "There's nothing to do here." I asked where there is anything to do. In Manassah, the best, mostly, the Sandusky Mall, ride around Huron. "Is this true? What do people in Plymouth do for entertainment? Why hasn't The Advertiser printed something about this? What needs to be done to correct the situation? Are there public funds to keep? If so, what should they be spent on?"

8. I got the impression that those who support to be the town's leaders don't do much leading. I also got the impression that Plymouth desperately needs leadership. I don't mean being down to kick these people in the pants, to get on the stick, to get the town turned around. Are there any plans to do this kind of thing? By you, Mr. Editor?

"If I had defended you, I am sorry. It was you who taught me to think this way. I remember you came to our English class and you talked about a poet named Burns. I made a note of that. What I could spell, then you quoted from him, 'O'wad th'ow'r, th' gift o' genius. Tae see pouers as thers see us.'" I looked this up. This is what I am doing now.

(Answers submitted below, so far as the staff can furnish them.)

1. That the personal property tax, which means tax on inventory of the merchant, is by law diminishing in this state is certainly true. A main reason for urging readers to shop at home first was this: What by doing so, retail merchants' inventories would tend to be kept at the high level and the tax thereon would benefit the schools primarily. While this newspaper has for 32 years argued that money is by no means the whole solution to the problems of education, nor even the major part of it, it acknowledges that without it "I was glad to hear your health is much better and that you are still improving. I never saw you have a real bad game. And you always kept everybody in line."

public enterprise fails and the schools need money as much as anyone else. To the first question, "Shop where?", the answer obviously is "Wherever there is." To the question "For what?" the answer here is "For whatever there is." Are we being fair? The urging is to always shop at home first; it does not suggest, nor imply that one cannot or should not shop elsewhere, but only at home first.

2. The best sort of piece is a report on number of residential dwellings offered for sale, average price, number of days each was formally offered for sale before sold or withdrawn from market, amount by which initial asking price had to be adjusted to accommodate the market, attitude of lenders, attitude of prospective buyers, and reasons therefor. Up to now, the staff has had doubts that it could obtain the cooperation of vendors, agents, buyers, prospective buyers and lenders to prepare such a piece. Or series of pieces.

3. a. If it is, The Advertiser doesn't know.

b. For what purpose?

c. See No. 3.

5. a. The new library hasn't been open more than a couple of months. The main library at Shiloh is the director's office in Ft. Wayne, Ind., and such plans, even if laid, or intended to be laid, should be given a reasonable opportunity to develop.

5. b. Don't know.

5. c. The staff is working on it.

5. d. The staff thinks so, but then what does the staff think?

5. e. Sure, why not.

6. a. Don't know.

6. b. Almost.

6. c. It's not intended to be.

6. d. Haven't it always?

7. b. It's easier for the staff to say what they don't do. In season some go to high school football and basketball games, but almost never to baseball, softball, or volleyball games, track and field meets, cross country meets, wrestling matches. There is considerably less "forthing and hacking" than there was when the staff came here 32 years ago. The staff doesn't know why.

7. c. As with other questions, it's difficult to get a handle on real facts. The staff's loath to go off half-cocked.

7. d. It would help if the situation, as you refer to it, could be defined.

7. e. There is one mill tax to benefit the park. Other public funds? Probably not.

7. f. There is a question that should be dealt with by consensus, not by the staff's decision.

8. a. The staff has tried. Perhaps its methods were ill-chosen, perhaps it spoke to the wrong people, perhaps no one is interested in what the staff does.

Slone's no-hitter all but perfect: 17 K's, one pop up

Brian Slone does what he does well, and often too.
On Thursday he took the slab for the Reds against the Yankees in FNL play.
The Yankees scored three runs. But without a hit, if you please. And Master Slone struck out 17 Yankee batsmen. The 18th? Why? Master Slone took care of him by forcing him to pop up. Where? To Master Slone's glove!

He walked seven Yankees. One Yankee reached safely on an error. Meanwhile the Reds - were coming Bobby Tuttle for six hits. He fanned 10 and passed nine.

'Colleen' sixth in $5,000 pace

Friday was not such a good night for Scroggie Colleen, five-year-old pacing mare belonging to Lysle and Robert Hamman, Noble road, Shiloh.
Starting from the No. 7 hole in the featured ninth race, a $5,000 open pace, the mare held third place in the first half mile, then faded to fourth at the three-quarter pole and finished sixth, three lengths off the winner, Dappy Em, who was timed in 1:59 4/5.

4th of July unaltered, thank God!

Some even say it really began further back in history as a tune the British soldiers sang during the French and Indian Wars from 1859 to 1763. Then the colonists caught on to the catchy tune, and from then it was ours.
The word "Yankee", historians say, comes from the Indian way of pronouncing "Anglais". Others say that it comes from the Dutch word for John, which was Yahn.
The Doodle part is more interesting. It is straight out of an old English play meaning foolish.
Cohan did a little changing of the original words, but 60 some verses were written over those Revolutionary years.

I like one better than the others: "Yankee Doodle keep it up Yankee Doodle dandy, Mind the music and the step, And with the girls be handy."
They were great verses and show that those men fighting for what we have today had a good sense of humor and really weren't so different.
They even ate the same things we do today. At least those who lived in more populous areas did, maybe not on the frontier.
They had access to the sailing ships that brought all the spices and rum by the barrel.
I think egg nogs have been known since the dawn of time, but somewhere along the line, some cook decided to fix it up a little more and devised a way of making it into a pie.
Start with a baked shell, and thank your lucky stars you are no Martha Washington or Abigail Adams who didn't have a super market to rush to for one. They had to do it on their own, which really and truly is the way it should be. For the filling, dissolve a package of gelatin in a fourth of a cup of water.

Measure a cup of milk and a half cup of sugar, bring to a boil. Add one half cup of this to three egg yolks, stir a little then add it to the rest of the milk and sugar. Cook and stir, do not boil, until the spoon is coated.
Stir in the gelatin and a fourth of a cup of rum, color doesn't matter.
Cool until it starts to set, then beat the three egg whites with three tablespoons of sugar, and fold in softly.
Next whip a cup of thick cream with one tablespoon of sugar. Fold this into the rest and pour into the pie shell. Sprinkle it all with nutmeg and chill.
Those good colonial cooks could make this a couple of days ahead if they had a good cold place to keep it because it freezes nicely.

'Jamie shot them!'

Lawyer lays defense on abuse of boy by parents

James E. (Jamie) Young, Jr., on Feb. 14 last fired 14 bullets into his father and four into his step-mother and killed them.

His lawyer, a flamboyant Jack Levin, veteran Cleveland criminal lawyer, stood before a jury of eight women and four men in Huron county common pleas court Friday and made that bald statement.

The issue to be resolved, the graying, diminutive barrister said, is whether Jamie Young acted in self-defense and whether he was temporarily insane because his father and his step-mother systematically abused him, Levin said, and indeed, on the day of the slaying, "put a gun into his gut and told him 'you're worthless, you sonofabitch, you're useless, you're no good, I ought to kill you right now.'"

Prosecutor Michael Fegen, speaking for the state, was having none of this. In measured, almost inaudible tones, he went on at length outlining the scope of the state's proof. Its framework is that Jamie Young after disagreements with his father and step-mother planned to do away with them and to take their money so he could go to Florida. The first witness for the state, a comely girl barely out of her teens, who admitted on the witness stand that she has a child out of wedlock and had sexual relations with the accused, testified that Jamie Young called her by telephone and invited her to join him on a trip to Florida, saying in response to her question he would "get the money by taking it from my dad's safe."

That Levin on cross examination attacked her with a statement that there is, in fact, no safe in the house was stoutly objected to by Dean Holman, assistant prosecutor, who is conducting the state's case, and Judge Robert W. Smith sustained the objection.

But Levin got his point across. Levin played the jury as an organist at a console. His voice from time to time affects the tremolo.

He said the defense's evidence will show that Jamie's father was a violent, volatile man "who lived a life of violence." A neighbor will testify, the Cleveland attorney said, that Young, Sr., threatened to shoot the neighbor's dog, which turned up shot to death somewhat later.

Levin said Young, Sr., and the boy's mother were divorced when the child was very small. The boy was placed in a foster home because his mother could not support him. Support payments by Young, Sr., were insufficient to raise the boy, Levin said.

The father obtained custody of the boy without the knowledge of the natural mother, whom the boy did not see until she came to the jail of the Young will testify under oath that the Youngs abused the boy, his teachers will testify that a pattern of abuse became apparent. The boy refused to disobey during physical education classes and was jeered by his peers for such an attitude, Levin said. Finally, the schools, after three years of grades of mostly F, "some barely above it, they put him in a learning disability class, and at this time he was all of three years behind those of his age."

Jamie "never lived up to his daddy's expectations," Levin said. His step-mother struck him with a soft drink bottle. In fear of his life, or in a moment of insanity, "I don't know which, Jamie shot his parents," Levin acknowledged.

Later he called Barbara Cook, with whom he had been intimate for several weeks, and asked her what he should do. It was she, Levin said, who proposed getting rid of the evidence, she who accompanied him to a motel in Ashland, where they had sex together, and "she who devised a scheme that this young man with a low IQ accepted."

Jamie loved Miss Cook, Levin said, and now she has turned on him, having turned state's evidence in return for the dropping of charges against him. Nevertheless, during his time in jail, she has addressed passionate letters to him and referred to herself as Barbara Young, Levin asserted.

Whether the accused grasped the import of the proceedings was a mystery to seasoned court observers. He maintained a somber look throughout the afternoon and the parade of four witnesses. He did not react to any statements made by Fegen or by any witness. From time to time he leaned over to Dennis Levin, son of the lead attorney, and whispered to him.

A considerable part of the afternoon was given over to consultations among the two defense attorneys, the two prosecutors and the judge, out of hearing of the jury, but recorded by the court reporter.

A total of 118 witnesses has been subpoenaed for the trial. On Friday morning, the jury was taken by bus to the site of the murders, the Young residence in the east side of Route 99 north of Monroeville. When the party arrived, it could not enter the building because there was no key.

Common law marriage argument fails Young

An effort by his attorney to exclude testimony of his erstwhile girlfriend, Barbara Cook, occupied the court Monday morning as Jamie Young's trail entered its second day.

Jack Levin, the diminutive 67-year-old Cleveland lawyer who is defending Young, moved that Miss Cook's testimony be barred from the trial on the grounds that she is Young's common law wife. A wife may not testify against her husband in a criminal action.

Miss Young and her mother, Evelyn, were called to the witness stand while the jury was excluded from the trial chamber.

Levin based his motion on a St. Valentine's day card sent to Young by Miss Cook, which she admitted she signed "Barb Young". He said she agreed to marry the accused when she thought she was pregnant by him. She acknowledged they did in fact plan to marry, but later, during the summer, and insisted no marriage had ever taken place.

As she did later on the witness stand in front of the jury, Miss Cook admitted that she wrote to Young she "would wait a hundred years for him, if necessary."

She acknowledged that she bought a book - Levin waived it before her, so the jury could see - titled "Big Book of Baby Names" so that she would be prepared if, in fact, she was pregnant. She acknowledged under oath that she thought so and underwent two tests for pregnancy. Miss Cook, who characterized the state's first witness, Debra Ferguson, as having the "public reputation as a slut", admitted that during sex with the defendant, neither she nor he used contraceptives.

She acknowledged Young had given her a ring, symbolic of a spiritual union, but she did not wear it on the third finger of her left hand.

Levin hammered hard on the question of whether Miss Cook went to Georgia to have an abortion. An objection of Assistant Prosecutor Dean Holman, this was stricken from the record.

Mrs. Cook testified that she despises Young, a contention that her daughter appeared to dispute when she gave testimony under oath during the afternoon before the jury.

Barbara Cook was led through the specifics of the events of Feb. 14-15 by prosecutor Michael Fegen. She admitted James Young, Sr., told her, "I don't want to see you here any more", under cross examination.

Levin pounded hard on his contention that she led Young throughout the events of Feb. 14 and 15 after he fatally shot his father and step-mother. He led her to admit she is a "take-charge" person, whereas Young is a passive type.

Miss Young acknowledged that after Young was arrested she told him she loves him, "because I didn't know what to say". In the face of readings from letters she admitted she wrote to the accused after his arrest, proclaiming she does not now know if she loves Young.

She told Levin she never saw Jamie act violently, that he said "he's my dad, I love him, I couldn't hurt him" after the accused told her, and showed her where, his father had beaten him.

The state introduced four witnesses after Miss Cook. Stanley J. Mejak, a fellow truck driver; Michael Lawrence, night shop foreman at Midway, Inc., who swore he saw Young, Sr., and Young, Jr., at the Midway shop briefly on Feb. 14, between 6 and 6:30 p.m.; Michael Scheel, part manager at Midway, who swore that after the rig left by Young, Sr., was repaired on Feb. 14, he tried to call him at his home, without response, and Alice Bishop, manager, Ohio Bureau of Employment Services at Norwalk, who swore that Jamie Young never applied there for unemployment benefits and, in fact, has not done so in Ohio.

So much as staff limitations permit, coverage of the Jamie Young trial in Huron county common pleas court will continue.

This is a departure from the newspaper's norm; an exception is made because of the special nature of the defense plea: insanity by reason of parental abuse.
